

Chapter 109-4

//

Liang Wanwan was part of the early class crowd and had developed social skills at school.

The next day, while Xu Qingzhu and Liang Shi were still asleep, she had already gone downstairs to buy breakfast.

She bought foods that couldn't go wrong—congee and baozi.¹

On this day, Haizhou City's temperature dropped again, at one point falling below zero. Yet when Liang Shi woke up, she felt warm beside her.

The moment she opened her eyes, the person in her arms also stirred, but only rolled over once and ended up lying face-down on the bed.

Liang Shi's arms were suddenly empty, and she felt the autumn cold wind hitting her. It was a bit cold now.

The person lying face-down on the bed struggled to move but couldn't.

She only stretched out her arm, her fingers continuously curling and spreading. Liang Shi's hand happened to be right beside hers, and she tried to gently reach over.

In an instant, their fingers hooked together.

After their fingers intertwined, Xu Qingzhu suddenly turned her head, looked at Liang Shi, and let out a soft laugh. Her voice carried the hoarseness of someone who had just woken up: "Morning."

Liang Shi: "Morning."

Seeing her so happy, Liang Shi couldn't help but ask: "Did you have a good dream?"

Xu Qingzhu nodded.

"What dream?" Liang Shi asked.

Xu Qingzhu's lips curved slightly, her voice containing a smile. "Not telling you."

Liang Shi: "....."

Her free hand stroked Xu Qingzhu's hair ends, and she said helplessly: "Fine."

When Xu Qingzhu and Liang Shi got up, they found breakfast on the table. Liang Wanwan was sitting on the sofa scrolling through her phone. Seeing them get up, she greeted them warmly: "Jie, Sister Qingzhu, good morning."

She had probably thought about that matter again at night and cried some more.

Liang Wanwan's eyes were badly swollen. Seeing this, Liang Shi said: "Did you cry again before bed?"

Liang Wanwan smiled embarrassedly. "I couldn't hold it in."

After a night of emotional adjustment, Liang Wanwan's mood had improved a lot, but she was still somewhat dejected.

Looking at her, Liang Shi was reminded of her former assistant Xiao Bai. When she had first become her assistant, she was also a particularly shy young girl who could shed tears over an injured cat on the roadside. She also had a habit of crying before bed, so everyone often saw her with swollen eyes the next morning.

Everyone would tease her for being a crybaby.

Seeing Liang Wanwan's appearance now, Liang Shi couldn't help but laugh: "You little crybaby."

As she spoke, she found a new towel, took some ice cubes from the refrigerator, wrapped them up, and handed them to Liang Wanwan. "Put this on your eyes. Look how swollen they've gotten."

Liang Wanwan took it and thanked her quietly.

Liang Shi didn't say anything more.

Xu Qingzhu, who was washing up at the sink, saw the interaction between the two. Especially upon hearing Liang Shi's somewhat indulgent "crybaby," her good mood from the morning suddenly vanished.

In Liang Shi's words, she was just a little bit unhappy.

Right, just a little bit.

However, Xu Qingzhu didn't show it. After finishing washing up, she noticed that Liang Wanwan was being very half-hearted about icing her eyes—one eye had the ice on it while the other eye was looking at her phone. Xu Qingzhu went over and said: "You need to ice both eyes, otherwise one will be swollen and one won't."

Liang Wanwan said: "Wait, I need to check in at Yang Shuyan's super topic."²

Xu Qingzhu paused. "You like Yang Shuyan?"

"Mm." Liang Wanwan said: "I like her red dress look."

"What a coincidence." Xu Qingzhu's eyes lit up. Before she could finish, Liang Wanwan cut in: "You too?"

Xu Qingzhu nodded.

Liang Wanwan said: "Her red dress look is really absolutely gorgeous. It's the photo that made me fall into the fandom."

Xu Qingzhu agreed: "Yes, I was also amazed by that movie of hers."

The two people who had both been captivated by the red dress look chatted animatedly here. Not only that, they also talked about that movie, discussing the characters in it at length.

Then they discovered that their understanding of the movie was very similar.

As they got into the conversation, Xu Qingzhu took out the complete set of signed photos that Yang Shuyan had given her and introduced them to Liang Wanwan like treasured possessions.

Seeing this, Liang Wanwan's mood—even accounting for the loss of Chen Mian's sketchbook last night—improved quite a bit.

Meanwhile, Liang Shi, who was washing up at the sink: "....."

She really wanted to ask: Is Yang Shuyan really that good-looking?

Xu Qingzhu was so happy just looking at that set of signed photos. If Liang Shi asked that, it would seem too petty.

Moreover, Liang Shi also wanted to say: No matter how good-looking Yang Shuyan is, she belongs to Zhao Ying!

But then she remembered that Xu Qingzhu also knew about this.

Liang Shi: "....."

Even a woman who already has a girlfriend—no, a friends-with-benefits—you're all this crazy about her.

If Yang Shuyan were truly single and available, they'd go absolutely insane!

First thing in the morning, Liang Shi felt like she had eaten a lemon.

No wait, the mint-flavored toothpaste was a bit sour.

It was the toothpaste's problem.

It had nothing to do with her.

-
1. "包子" (bāozi) are Chinese steamed buns filled with meat or vegetables, a common breakfast food in China. ↵
 2. "超话" (chāo huà, super topic) is a fan community feature on Weibo (Chinese social media platform) dedicated to celebrities or topics. Fans can "check in" daily to show support and help boost their idol's rankings. ↵