

Chapter 115-1

Liang Xinran naturally didn't leave.

Because Qiu Zimin fainted again.

Liang Xinzhou immediately carried Qiu Zimin back to her room upstairs and had Liang Xinhe call the family doctor.

This hour or so could only be described as a farce.

Liang Shi didn't bother anymore. She left this whole mess for Liang Xinzhou to clean up and had no intention of wading through these muddy waters again.

After saying goodbye to Liang Xinhe, she went out to the car.

The two little ones in the car were eagerly waiting for her return. Although cartoons were playing on the tablet, neither of them was in the mood to watch.

When Liang Shi came back, Ling Dang asked nervously, "Auntie, how did it go?"

Liang Shi patted her head. "Everything's fine. You little one, why don't you ever listen to adults?"

"Because adults lie." Ling Dang pouted. "There's obviously something wrong, but you won't tell me."

Liang Shi pulled her directly into her arms. "Your daddy is inside too. Do you want to go home with Daddy later or with me?"

"I have school tomorrow." Ling Dang sighed. "I'd better go with Daddy."

Liang Shi kissed her on her puffed-up cheek. "You're so well-behaved?"

Ling Dang nodded. "Of course~"

Her words were full of smugness.

Liang Shi chatted with her for a while, and before long, she brought up Shen Yiran from kindergarten again.

When talking about Shen Yiran, she wanted to pick a fight with Rainbow.

Rainbow, who had been peacefully watching cartoons, looked confused. "What?"

Ling Dang huffed lightly. "Don't try to steal Shen Yiran from me."

Rainbow: "...Why would you think I like her?"

Ling Dang immediately widened her eyes. "You actually don't like Shen Yiran?"

Rainbow: "...?"

Liang Shi found it amusing listening from the side. All the unpleasantness from the old mansion just now instantly vanished.

The two little ones were bickering in the back, so Liang Shi put on some music and took out her phone to play with.

There were no new messages, so she opened Weibo. Her Weibo account's followers were increasing every day—traffic brought by the "Mo Guang Mo Cai"¹ production team and Zhao Ying's side, as well as the red dress photos that had gone viral before.

Seeing the date of her last post and the comments below it, Liang Shi suddenly remembered that she should be doing some fan service².

But she wasn't someone who normally liked taking selfies, and she had no old photos on her phone to post on Weibo.

So she reluctantly opened her phone's front camera.

As it turned out, a beautiful face could handle a phone's front camera.

Because she was highly sensitive to cameras, she could almost find her most beautiful angle when taking photos. After taking the shot, she only needed to add a filter.

Without Sister Wang's urging and guidance, she could manage very decent fan service all by herself.

From taking photos to editing, it only took a few minutes, and then she posted on Weibo.

@Liang Shi: Going to join the production soon~ Pretty excited. How about you all?

A typical interactive post.

Talk about your current situation, then ask about the fans.

Supposedly this was better for cultivating fans.

Liang Shi wasn't someone who particularly liked cultivating fans, because she couldn't bear the consequences of fan backlash.

But fans could indirectly reflect a celebrity's commercial value. When sponsors chose celebrities for endorsements and promotions, they looked at commercial capability.

Liang Shi was good at acting, but she also needed to eat.

The money earned from purely acting might just be enough to support her staff, so she needed to develop other sources of income.

Back then, Sister Wang had poked her head and said, "Not earning money when you can—are you stupid? It's just posting a few Weibos. There's no shame in doing it to put food on the table. Besides, what's the big deal? They like you, you have such a beautiful face, what's wrong with posting a few photos for everyone to see? Can't you have some spirit of entertaining the public?"

Liang Shi: "..."

Liang Shi was convinced.

As it turned out, she used to be spoiled.

When she was lazy, the captions for her Weibo posts were written by Xiao Bai. After filming all day, she was too tired, her mind was empty, and she couldn't think of any positive content at all. She was so drained she just wanted to sleep. The photos only looked so pretty because her face was beautiful.

And it was Xiao Bai who was responsible for taking her photos, shooting from a low angle, making her look beautiful from every angle.

Like she was going to compete with other actresses on the red carpet.

But now: "..."

She did everything herself. One person was an entire team.

Liang Shi wasn't considering building a team for now. Her current relaxed state was pretty good—work when there's work, rest when there isn't.

Handling everything by herself—freedom.

However, the previous Liang Shi had been criticized by rival fans³ for "pandering to fans" because she was so active with fan service.

It really disgusted Liang Shi.

At the time, she thought that people with dirty hearts see everything as dirty.

But because of what that person said, she posted multiple Weibos every day for three consecutive days—all kinds of selfies and daily life shares.

That was one of the few small rebellions in her career.

It was later put to an end by Sister Wang, because Sister Wang said posting too much on Weibo would dilute traffic and reduce commercial value.

Liang Shi: "..."

She learned something new again.

After she posted the Weibo, people quickly came to comment, though not many.

They came in twos and threes, but they were basically all compliments.

[Aww, who is this beautiful lady? I want cuddles.]

[Wifey is joining the production? I'm so excited too.]

[Looking forward to "Mo Guang Mo Cai"! May it be a big hit!]

...

Some IDs even had Zhao Ying's name in them—obviously they came to show support for Zhao Ying's sake.

Most of them were just fawning over her looks.

Liang Shi read for a while, then closed her phone.

Footnotes:

^1 Mo Guang Mo Cai (餘光): The name of the drama Liang Shi is about to film. The title literally means "afterglow" or "peripheral vision/remaining light."

^2 Fan service (營業, yíngyè): In the Chinese entertainment industry, this term literally means "doing business" but refers to celebrities interacting with fans through social media posts, selfies, and updates to maintain their popularity and engagement.

^3 Rival fans (對家, duìjiā): In Chinese fan culture, this refers to fans of competing celebrities who often clash with each other online. They may criticize or attack rival celebrities to elevate their own idol.
