

Chapter 130-1

Liang Shi once had a wish—to have lots and lots of love.

That was a line from a movie she had watched many years ago, and she often quoted it.

In everyone's eyes, she was Qiu Zimin's most beloved daughter.

But love spoken a thousand, ten thousand times from the mouth isn't love.

Real love is something you can feel—like from her eldest brother.

But her eldest brother was too busy back then. He was being groomed as the primary heir of the Liang family, and there were extremely high demands on him in terms of both skills and character.

So back then, he not only had heavy coursework but also all sorts of social etiquette classes.

The time he could spare for Liang Shi was limited.

The days spent playing with her eldest brother were very happy—those were times when she could feel love.

That's why she could clearly sense that the "love" Qiu Zimin gave her was distorted.

Qiu Zimin only "loved" her in front of others.

Behind closed doors, it was always contempt and disgust.

As for her father, he was just a background decoration, completely indifferent to her.

It was precisely because she had her eldest brother as a comparison that she knew what she received from Qiu Zimin was all an illusion.

So she wanted lots and lots of love.

She didn't want to be sent to Yang Jiani by Qiu Zimin, and she didn't want to keep seeing Qiu Zimin's disgusted gaze.

As a young child, she didn't even understand why Qiu Zimin had to hate her.

She clearly liked... children very much.

Whether it was her eldest brother or second brother, she was always strict yet loving with them. Only toward her was it different.

The lots of love she wanted back then was nothing more than gaining some warmth in that cold, icy home.

After she came to this world, although she didn't have parents, her grandparents gave her enough love.

They depended on each other for survival. Even though life was poor, there was enough love.

But the original owner had borne Qiu Zimin's "revenge" in her place, becoming cynical and irritable.

The system had once said that she and the original owner were a correction—a restoration of normal order.

Then who had caused the change in order?

In other words, who had swapped the fates of the two of them?

If her guess was correct, what was the original owner's wish?

And Qi Jiao had died in despair in that world, yet was reborn in this world.

It was as if it were a mirror world.

Everything she hadn't possessed in that world was made up for in this world.

A happy family. Family members who doted on her.

But correspondingly, she had also lost some things.

Such as memories. Such as intelligence.

The original Qi Jiao was very smart—at such a young age, she already knew how to write her diary in Morse code.

But the Qi Jiao in this world, because of the high fever she had before the zhongkao, ended up with very poor grades.

She clearly wasn't that old, yet she said she had a goldfish brain and was always forgetting things.

And then there was Sun Chengcheng.

After returning, Liang Shi also learned about Sun Chengcheng's current situation.

Liang Shi also still remembered the times when Sun Chengcheng would post on Weibo for promotional purposes in that world. In the timelines of these two worlds, there were many overlapping points.

Sun Chengcheng only became connected to that world after her career here hit rock bottom and she became the target of public criticism in the entertainment industry.

But for Sun Chengcheng, she could travel back and forth between the two worlds.

As if she were on a higher level.

Hers was a wish come true, Qi Jiao's was a mirror world, Sun Chengcheng's was traveling through time and space...

There seemed to be commonalities, yet there also seemed to be not quite so many commonalities.

After carefully sorting through everything, Liang Shi fell into deep thought again.

Before she could think of anything, she heard Xiao Bai shout: "Sister Liang, we're here!"

Liang Shi was startled into a shiver, then came back to her senses.

Xiao Bai muttered: "Thinking about your girlfriend again? You're so absent-minded."

Liang Shi raised her hand and pressed on the space between her eyebrows. Too many threads were tangled together in her mind, as if she had just experienced a storm.

She shook her head: "Just thinking about some things."

Before getting out of the car, Liang Shi reminded Wang Zhaozhao: "Sister Wang, about the press conference... make it as soon as possible."

Wang Zhaozhao nodded coolly: "Got it. I'll go negotiate."

Actually, in this era, press conferences were already outdated.

Livestreaming was the fastest way.

But livestreams could only be seen by fans—only by people who liked her.

There were also many "passersby."¹

Most importantly, Liang Shi wanted to bid farewell to this industry she deeply loved in a proper manner.

She had once bloomed on the big screen, and in the end, she would also wither in front of the camera.

Xiao Bai kept saying it was a pity, but Liang Shi said: "Once you've decided, there's nothing to feel sorry about. There are too many choices and possibilities in life."

1. Passersby (路人): In Chinese internet/entertainment terminology, "passersby" refers to people who are neither fans nor haters of a celebrity—they're neutral observers or the general public who may have casual opinions but aren't invested followers. ⇐