

Chapter 145-2

"Wifey."¹ Xu Qingzhu's voice was very soft, her tone gentle, carrying an indescribable sense of grievance. "I missed you so much."

Liang Shi: "....."

Just a moment ago, Liang Shi had briefly considered giving her the cold shoulder, but at this moment, all her coldness completely crumbled.

Liang Shi's arms, which had been hanging at her sides, reached out to hold Xu Qingzhu tightly. Cold wind swirled around them, blowing wildly.

Xu Qingzhu sobbed with grievance: "I drank so much wine. I missed you."

Liang Shi stroked her slender back, her long hair tangling between Liang Shi's fingers.

"Wifey." Xu Qingzhu's voice was choked with emotion. "Please don't be angry with me... I really didn't mean to say those things."

Liang Shi could smell a strong scent of alcohol.

It seemed Xu Qingzhu had drunk quite a lot—she couldn't even speak clearly, and by the end, her body was trembling badly.

Hearing her say this, Liang Shi also felt her heart ache: "I'm not angry with you."

Xu Qingzhu's eyelashes brushed against the skin of Liang Shi's neck: "I'm sorry, wifey."

This wasn't the first time Xu Qingzhu had called her "wifey."

It's just that when she usually said it, it was mostly teasing, or when she was being bullied too hard in bed, she would cry out: "Wifey, be gentler..."

If Liang Shi stopped, she would then say pitifully: "Wifey, it feels so uncomfortable."

These were all things that generally only happened during her heat period.

When she was properly sober, Xu Qingzhu never called her that. She usually called her Teacher Liang, Liang Shi, or occasionally called her "jiejie"² in a flirtatious manner.

But today, she used such a grieved tone, her voice drawing out at the end—it was heart-wrenching to hear.

Liang Shi patted her back: "It's okay, I'm really not angry with you."

That afternoon, Liang Shi had also been reflecting on whether she hadn't done well enough.

It's just that the more than three hours of waiting had put her in a somewhat unpleasant mood.

When she first saw Xu Qingzhu, she didn't feel as fond of her as before.

But the moment Xu Qingzhu looked at her with those eyes, all of Liang Shi's rationality and resistance crumbled completely.

Her wife was standing right in front of her looking so aggrieved, and she was just going to coldly stand by and ignore her?

Liang Shi couldn't do it.

Xu Qingzhu wrapped her arms around her neck, her warm breath from speaking landing on Liang Shi's skin: "Wifey... please don't be angry, okay?"

Liang Shi patiently explained to her again: "I'm not angry with you."

Meanwhile, the secretary standing not far away holding Xu Qingzhu's coat was so shocked her jaw practically dropped.

Th-th-th-this... was this the President Xu she knew?

Her image had completely collapsed, just like that, in an instant.

Footnotes:

¹ "Wifey" (老婆, lǎo pó): A Chinese term of endearment used between spouses or romantic partners, equivalent to "wife" or "wifey" in English. It's an intimate and affectionate way to address one's partner.

² "Jiejie" (姐姐): Literally means "older sister" in Chinese, but is also commonly used as a flirtatious or affectionate term of address toward an older woman one is close to or romantically interested in.