

Chapter 156-11

What had just happened with Xu Qingzhu seemed like just a dream Liang Shi had.

But looking at the knife lying quietly on the floor, still reflecting light, Liang Shi knew—it wasn't a dream.

It was the impact of the world's operating laws falling on Xu Qingzhu during the correction process.

From the looks of it, both she and Lu Jiayi were fine.

So all the damage from changing this major event had been borne by Xu Qingzhu alone.

She didn't know how long Xu Qingzhu would have to endure this before the change from this major event could be balanced out.

So... it seemed... she could only follow the plotline.

Liang Shi was no longer sleepy at all.

After Xu Qingzhu fell asleep, Liang Shi lay there and kissed her forehead, then tiptoed out of bed.

On her phone was a divorce agreement that the lawyer had just drafted. She went to another room, got the printer, and printed out the document.

The clacking sound of the printer outputting paper was particularly jarring in the silent room.

Liang Shi read through each clause. She wasn't asking for anything—she chose to leave with nothing.

Even though she didn't have many assets, she still gave half to Xu Qingzhu.

Liang Shi kept clicking the ballpoint pen in her hand, clicking it over and over.

In the end, she still signed her name on the divorce agreement.

Moonlight refracted into the room, casting silver radiance across the floor.

That blade that had just touched her glands still had traces of her blood on it.

She put away the knife, then took out her suitcase from the wardrobe. She packed some things she needed. Then, when the distant horizon showed the first pale light of dawn, she tiptoed into the bedroom to look at Xu Qingzhu.

Xu Qingzhu was still sound asleep, clearly no longer having nightmares.

Liang Shi kissed her cheek, then drew the curtains tight and closed the door.

She left, pulling her suitcase behind her.

This was a rare good dream for Xu Qingzhu in recent days.

She dreamed of holding a wedding with Liang Shi. The original wedding had been crude and hasty, and it had been with that person.

Xu Qingzhu had married her with expectations, more or less.

But later she discovered that person wasn't the one she wanted to marry.

However, last night she dreamed that she and Liang Shi had a wedding at a mountain villa, and she had thrown the bouquet to Lin Luoxi.

Because Lin Luoxi was pregnant.

It was a bit absurd, but it was a beautiful dream.

After waking up, Xu Qingzhu stretched lazily and saw that it was already 9:30 in the morning.

She had drunk too much again last night. Her memory seemed to stop at when she and Liang Shi were kissing on the sofa.

No matter how hard she tried to recall what happened after, she couldn't remember.

She reached out to feel the side of the bed—it was already cold.

As if no one had ever lain there.

Having gotten enough sleep, her mental state was better than usual. She lifted the covers and got out of bed, seeing the honey water on the nightstand. Although it had cooled down, she still picked it up and drank half of it.

Then she pulled open the curtains. Sunlight poured in, and she called out loudly: "Teacher Liang!"

But no one answered.

Xu Qingzhu walked out holding the cup, muttering to herself: "Did she go grocery shopping?"

Walking out of the bedroom, the house was empty.

Xu Qingzhu pouted. She looked around the kitchen and saw that there was congee already simmered, kept warm in the pot.

On the refrigerator was a sticky note: [Baby, make sure to eat properly!]

Xu Qingzhu peeled it off to look at it, then stuck it back on.

She didn't feel like eating yet, so she went to the bathroom to wash up. But when passing by another room, she noticed the door was open. She thought Liang Shi was secretly playing the piano, but when she pushed the door open, the room was also empty. Even the bedsheets didn't have a single wrinkle.

Xu Qingzhu felt rather disappointed.

But then she saw the A4 paper on the table—something that hadn't been in this room before.

There were only two people in the house. If she hadn't put it there, it must be Liang Shi's.

Curiosity drove her to walk over, and then she saw the five large characters at the top—
Divorce Agreement.

The document was three pages, already stapled together, very neatly arranged.

It was the kind of binding that even a perfectionist boss like Xu Qingzhu couldn't find fault with.

And there were two copies.

Both had Liang Shi's fingerprints pressed on them, with Liang Shi's name signed.

On the table was also a sticky note: [Let's get divorced. After you sign, put the other copy in the delivery box downstairs. I'll come get it. As for the reason... there's no reason. I'll have my phone turned off these days. You don't need to look for me. Oh, and don't cry. If you still want both of us to be okay, then sign.]

Xu Qingzhu: "..."

The cup in her hand suddenly fell to the ground, shattering on impact.

Ice-cold honey water spilled all over the floor.
