

Chapter 194 - Part 2

Extra 16-2

After graduating kindergarten, Shen Yiran changed schools. She and Sheng Yu advanced to first grade, and before long they'd forgotten about Shen Yiran.

School was too fun, with so many people—they couldn't even remember who Shen Yiran was.

Liang Wenxuan admitted she was just that forgetful.

Sheng Yu often said she had a goldfish brain.

Although Liang Wenxuan would always retort verbally, unfortunately she couldn't out-argue Sheng Yu and was always completely suppressed.

The reason Sheng Yu kicked someone was entirely because that person had a foul mouth and wandering hands, actually reaching out to grope Liang Wenxuan's chest.

Liang Wenxuan had developed better than most female classmates during puberty. The school uniform was a shirt + plaid skirt, and even though she'd ordered a size larger, Liang Wenxuan's figure was still enviably good.

Usually when she appeared in the hallway, many people would crane their necks to look.

But unexpectedly, yesterday that senior, just because Liang Wenxuan went over and said, "Senior, I... like you."

Before Liang Wenxuan could say anything else, she directly put her hands on her, and then Sheng Yu twisted her wrist and kicked her.

By today, it had already been spread like this.

Liang Wenxuan didn't really care. She had a powerful sense of dullness.

That is, what others said would always be filtered several times before entering her brain, and her emotions were relatively less sensitive.

So she was slow and leisurely all day, like a sloth.

Perfectly complementary to the fiery Sheng Yu.

However, when the two were together, they were always causing a commotion.

Sheng Yu always complained that Liang Wenxuan was slow, and Liang Wenxuan would answer slowly: "Huh?"

Dragging out the tone.

Sheng Yu would immediately lose her temper.

Sheng Yu asked Liang Wenxuan if she wanted to deal with the school rumors. Liang Wenxuan shook her head: "With so many people, can you block everyone's mouths?"

Sheng Yu: "That's also true."

"In the end, it's still your fault." Liang Wenxuan glanced at her sideways, "Just playing a game with you, you insisted I go confess, and now it's embarrassing."

Sheng Yu: "..."

"Wasn't I just helping you out?" Sheng Yu said: "Who knew she was such scum?"

Liang Wenxuan pouted: "Help me with what?"

"Last time you said that tall senior was pretty and good at studying, I thought you liked her." Sheng Yu said.

Liang Wenxuan: "..."

Liang Wenxuan thought for two seconds: "I said that?"

Sheng Yu was so angry she pinched her philtrum.

However, the class bell rang, and Sheng Yu turned around, but she heard Liang Wenxuan say slowly under the lingering bell: "That day I also seemed to say she looked a bit like Zhou Caihong."

Sheng Yu was shocked: "Who?"

A few seconds later, the teacher came in.

Liang Wenxuan had no time to explain and continued working on problems with her head down.

Only after entering high school did Liang Wenxuan discover that memorizing things was getting harder and harder.

She always got the poetry fill-in-the-blanks wrong on Chinese tests, and not just one or two.

Her grades had already started hitting rock bottom.

Sheng Yu was average.

In Xu Qingzhu's words, Sheng Yu probably didn't inherit their family's excellent academic genius genes.

Sheng Yu would usually roll her eyes, "I'm just too lazy to study."

Then she'd get her forehead knocked by Xu Qingya, "When I was your age, I was first in the entire grade."

Sheng Yu: "..."

No helping it, Sheng Yu was too lazy.

However, when it came to playing drums, Sheng Yu wasn't lazy at all.

She'd already decided to take the arts track for college entrance exams, so even with her current grades, it was enough for her to get into a top arts university.

Liang Wenxuan had nothing she was particularly interested in. If there was something she was relatively interested in, it was only novels.

Occasionally reading novels while forgetting to eat and sleep, secretly curled up under the blanket reading, which resulted in her eyesight becoming nearsighted to over 400 degrees.

It wasn't that Liang Wenxuan didn't work hard, but after working hard, she discovered that for some people, not working hard would be better.

Fortunately, her family didn't put much pressure on her. Her dad said if it didn't work out, she could study abroad, or see what she liked to do and do a bit of that—the Liang family foundation was enough for her to coast through life anyway.

Liang Wenxuan had been instilled with the philosophy of being a slacker from early on.

But she was still working hard.

This class was the homeroom teacher's. The classroom only quieted down after the homeroom teacher came in.

Liang Wenxuan was working on a math problem, having written out half a page of calculations, but felt she was calculating further and further off track.

She heard the homeroom teacher on the podium say: "Our class is getting a transfer student today. I hope everyone will get along well in the future."

After speaking, everyone looked toward the classroom door.

A girl wearing a white jacket walked in, her voice clear: "Hello everyone, I'm Zhou Caihong. Please take care of me."

Her eyes were deep-set, her pupils tending toward blue, her nose bridge high—clearly mixed-race features.

As soon as she entered, the class erupted with successive "wows."

Marveling at how beautiful she was.

Upon hearing the name Zhou Caihong, both Liang Wenxuan and Sheng Yu simultaneously raised their heads and immediately saw the person they hadn't seen in many years.

After graduating from kindergarten, Rainbow had almost never returned to the country.

They hadn't really seen her either.

When they were young, the two would occasionally get together to curse this heartless person, but gradually they forgot about her too.

After all, they were kids—none of them remembered things well.

Over the years, Rainbow had basically scaled up proportionally, and she'd grown especially tall—by visual estimate, about 1.7 meters.

Tall and thin, with striking features.

Standing in a crowd, she was the focal point.

The teacher casually pointed to a seat: "Go sit over there."

The place indicated was the empty seat beside Liang Wenxuan.

Because her deskmate had applied for leave due to illness a few days ago, the seat had become vacant.

When the teacher announced this news, Liang Wenxuan felt the gazes of classmates looking over were filled with complex emotions.

There was envy and jealousy.

Liang Wenxuan didn't care much. Only when Rainbow walked over did she keep her head down working on problems.

Ignoring her completely.