

Chapter 23-1

Actually, even without her saying it, Liang Shi could guess.

Russian roulette was a drinking game played at drinking tables. There were six glasses of alcohol in total, and players would take turns rolling dice, drinking whichever numbered glass corresponded to the number they rolled.

This continued until the dice you rolled corresponded to an empty glass, at which point your turn would end.

However, you would then be responsible for refilling that glass.

If you were lucky, you basically wouldn't have to drink much.

But if your luck was terrible, one person might end up drinking all six glasses.

Liang Shi had previously seen this type of game at a dinner party after an audition in a film crew, where more than twenty bottles of beer were consumed in less than half an hour.

Several female acting students were forced to drink a lot, and the director and producers' hands began wandering inappropriately toward those girls.

Liang Shi couldn't stand watching it anymore and left the gathering.

She also called the girls' teacher along the way.

Later, she didn't know whether those people succeeded in their intentions, because although she had passed the audition and gotten the role, due to the toxic atmosphere of that crew, she chose to give it up.

Even though it was a decent script.

And at this moment, judging from the photos, those wine glasses were not small.

Moreover, there were many bottles scattered messily on the table—not only beer, but also some inferior wine and more beer.

Beer bottles were the most numerous.

In the private room, there were men and women, and some people appeared to be in an extremely excited state.

Liang Shi glanced at the message, confirmed the location, and immediately headed out.

Just then, Xu Qingya came out of her room. Seeing her hurried figure, she couldn't help but ask: "Sister Liang, where are you going?"

Liang Shi didn't look back as she grabbed a pair of comfortable sneakers from the shoe cabinet: "To find your sister."

Xu Qingya was stunned: "She hasn't come back yet?"

"She's at Huayue International¹," Liang Shi said. "Trapped there with Bai Weiwei."

"Damn." Xu Qingya cursed, immediately stuffing her phone in her pocket. "I'm coming with you."

"You know about Huayue International?" Liang Shi asked.

Xu Qingya casually tied up her hair: "Who in Haichuan doesn't know? It's a famous money pit²—people who go there are the type who love to play recklessly. Sometimes when they're drunk and wild, they don't care about anything. There were even fatalities there a few years ago."

"How is a place like that still not shut down?" Liang Shi grumbled irritably, completely unaware that her state of mind had been thrown into complete chaos by that photo.

"It can't be shut down," Xu Qingya said. "They only provide the venue, they don't provide the substances. A lot of the stuff comes from those scumbags buying from the black market themselves. And do you know who's backing Huayue International?"

"Who?" Liang Shi asked.

She also didn't realize that she was actually relying on a fifteen-year-old girl to explain these things to her.

However, this showed that Xu Qingya really knew quite a lot.

Probably more than Xu Qingzhu knew.

It was likely because Xu Qingya often hung around with some good-for-nothing rich second-generation kids, so she understood these places.

"The Shen family," Xu Qingya shrugged. "Who would dare to easily touch Huayue International? Touching it would be openly opposing the Shen family."

Liang Shi didn't know what background this Shen family had, but obviously, now wasn't a good time to inquire.

She promptly reined in her curiosity: "Let's go find your sister first."

Footnotes:

¹ Huayue International: A high-end entertainment establishment/club

² Money pit: A place where wealthy people go to spend money extravagantly