

Chapter 26-6

//

Dongheng Group's headquarters wasn't particularly eye-catching among the CBD buildings.

Liang Shi went to the HR department with her documents to report in. The colleagues here had all seen her before.

To be precise, they had seen the original owner.

They all had a poor impression of her—just a spoiled rich young lady with weird outfits and a bad temper.

However, Liang Shi wasn't here to change their impression of her. She dutifully entered her information, then the department head called the design department head to come pick her up.

As soon as the words left her mouth, an irritated roar came through the phone: "What kind of parachute soldier is being dropped in now? Can't she read signs or recognize words? Anyone who can't even find their own department should be fired early. Our design department doesn't want her."

Click.

The phone was hung up.

The HR department head looked at Liang Shi awkwardly and fearfully, afraid that she would have a young miss tantrum and directly trash the office. She trembled for a long time not knowing what to say.

Liang Shi didn't make things difficult for her, just smiled and said, "I'll go over myself."

Department head: "Ah?"

She paused, "How about I take you there instead?"

"No need." Liang Shi said: "You're busy, I can read, I'll find it myself."

Department head: "..."

She had a feeling that Miss Liang not tearing apart the HR department office was her showing restraint, and she was waiting to go tear apart the design department instead.

She couldn't help but light a candle in her heart for that hot-tempered design department head.

Liang Shi left and took the elevator to the 12th floor.

The 12th floor was in chaos. The newly established department was understaffed with too much work, and the responsibilities of each department weren't completely clear yet. Although they had hired a chief editor with many years of magazine experience, she had previously worked in print media and was almost completely disconnected from new media.

The company's upper management paid special attention to this department, wanting to use it to get a piece of the new media magazine market and thus have their own promotional channel.

They had a topic selection meeting with the general manager in the afternoon, but they were still completely clueless.

All the directions submitted by the planning department had been rejected by the department head.

As soon as Liang Shi walked in, she heard that irritated voice roaring on the phone: "Are you all pigs? Top university graduates with three years of digital magazine experience, and the topics you submit are all this kind of stuff? How can any of this be used? All of this has been written to death already—who's going to read it? And this one, pandering for traffic—do you have any journalistic integrity left? The topic selection meeting is this afternoon, and you can't even decide on the most basic things. What the hell are we supposed to discuss?"

Everyone was gathered around having a meeting, and all the workstations were empty.

Only a little girl sat in a corner position, reading a fairy tale book.

The little girl looked about the same age as Lingdang¹. Even though the outside world was noisy and chaotic, she remained immersed in the world of books.

Liang Shi stood there for ten minutes without anyone noticing her.

Until the department head said, "I'm giving you half an hour to submit new topics. We need to move quickly to the next step. Alright, meeting dismissed."

Everyone breathed a sigh of relief and scattered like birds and beasts.

When they turned around and saw a strikingly beautiful woman, they were all stunned.

A round-faced girl turned around and said, "Department head, there's a new person here."

The department head had her hair meticulously combed back, with too much hair gel making it look very greasy. She adjusted her glasses and looked over at Liang Shi, "Are you the new one?"

Liang Shi nodded, "Yes."

The department head stared at her for a while, "Here to be a model?"

"No, here to do copywriting, or interviews." Liang Shi said.

"What did you major in?"

"Chinese Language and Literature."

"Which school?"

Liang Shi really didn't want to mention the original owner's third-rate diploma mill, but she could only bite the bullet and say: "Guangliu University²."

Everyone in the office was shocked.

How did someone with such trashy credentials get into Dongheng?

You should know that everyone present had graduated from top domestic universities.

So they looked at her with some disdain.

Liang Shi didn't mind. The department head paused and said, "Then you'll go to the copywriting team."

Liang Shi's workstation was also in the periphery, right next to that little girl. She had nothing to do all morning.

She sat there bored until noon, caused quite a stir when she went to the cafeteria for lunch, then hurriedly finished eating and returned to her workstation.

Near the start of work, she went to the restroom again.

Soon after, a bunch of people came in.

Every company's restroom was a place for everyone to gossip, and Dongheng was no exception.

From their voices, they were people from the magazine department.

It was Liang Shi's first day, and she hadn't completely memorized everyone yet.

At first they were discussing her, talking about how someone with such poor academic credentials had managed to get into Dongheng.

"When I was eating lunch, I heard someone say her background seems quite significant—even our General Manager Liang has to give her some face."

"Really? Then what's she doing in our magazine department?"

"That office in HR that's now used as a meeting room, remember? That used to be her office."

"Damn, she's a big shot."

"These types are the most annoying—can't do anything but you can't say anything either."

"..."

They discussed for a while, and Liang Shi had heard enough. She was about to leave when someone suddenly exclaimed.

"What's wrong?" someone asked.

"Chen Liuying's agent jumped off a building." That person said, "She was just sent to the hospital."

"Who? That Chen Liuying who became famous overnight? The one called the number one imperial Alpha³?"

"Yeah, I saw the gossip reports saying the agent went to Huayue International to drink with people to get resources for her, got assaulted, and couldn't handle it so she jumped."

"The entertainment industry is just like that, but looking at it this way, Chen Liuying isn't a good person either."

Liang Shi perked up her ears to listen to their discussion.

Chen Liuying, who would later remove the original owner's glands, had appeared.

She was a celebrity.

She took out her phone to check, and what popped up were all today's hot news.

They were all discussing Chen Liuying's agent's suicide attempt, and when Liang Shi scrolled down, she immediately frowned.

Chen Liuying's agent was—Bai Weiwei.

Footnotes:

¹ 鈴铛 (Língdāng) - A young girl mentioned earlier in the story, whose name means "little bell"

² 光流大學 (Guāngliú University) - A fictional low-tier university in the story

³ 第一禦A (dì yī yù A) - "Number one imperial Alpha" - a title referring to a dominant, powerful Alpha character, likely in the entertainment industry