

Chapter 46-2

Back then at Huayue International, Liang Shi had provided the direction, and Zhao Xuning had used her connections to investigate everything clearly.

It was Bai Weiwei who had arranged to meet with the director there to discuss business, and happened to be seen by Cheng Ran, who then used Huaguang Group's influence to pressure the director, instigating him to use Bai Weiwei's phone to call Xu Qingzhu out.

They even specifically changed their private room for them.

Originally, Bai Weiwei had booked a private room on the seventh floor and hadn't planned to stay that long.

It was the director who, following Cheng Ran's instructions, forcibly dragged it out until ten o'clock.

Even after investigating everything clearly, it was useless. Cheng Ran had disappeared from the entertainment circle for a period of time.

She was in a state where she was virtually untraceable.

Who would have thought they'd encounter each other here?

However, Liang Shi didn't plan to settle that day's score with her today. Today she came mainly to find Qi Jiao to clarify the matter about Aunt Qi.

If she didn't clarify it for even one day, she wouldn't be able to truly sever ties with the Liang family.

She wanted to know when she had come to this world.

Even if she suppressed her curiosity, she could still live in this world, but it would always be a knot in her heart.

A knot in one's heart must be untied, otherwise it would be a knot for life.

Although Liang Shi was laid-back, she never avoided problems when they arose.

The sports car with Qi Jiao and Cheng Ran was still chatting, causing even Rainbow to become curious. "Is that person Teacher Qi's girlfriend? Why does she look so fierce?"

Liang Shi turned her body around, "Little children shouldn't look."

Rainbow spoke sincerely, "If I don't look, won't it still happen?"

Liang Shi: "..."

This question left Liang Shi completely baffled.

Rainbow once again revealed her genius IQ. "They'll still fight. Human traffickers won't stop trafficking me just because I don't look. Bad people won't stop hurting me just because I don't look. Those harms exist objectively and are things I'll have to face sooner or later. Why should I avoid them?"

Liang Shi: "...?"

She never expected that one day she'd be discussing such issues with a five-year-old girl.

After thinking for a while, she said, "It's to protect you."

"Shouldn't protecting me involve letting me see more, hear more, and learn more?" Rainbow shook her head on her own. "You adults are so strange."

Liang Shi: "..."

Hey!

You're the strange little kid!

"It's because your body and mind aren't mature yet. Watching people fight doesn't benefit you in any way." Liang Shi patiently explained to her. "From the perspective of human development, children your age need to grow up in an atmosphere of love and warmth. This is beneficial for shaping your worldview¹."

After saying this, she paused, wondering if this was too profound. Would a little child understand what a worldview was?

Who would have thought Rainbow would frown, puzzled, and say, "So without an atmosphere of love and warmth, little children can't develop correct worldviews?"

Liang Shi: "..."

It had to be said that Rainbow's perspective on problems was quite unique.

Quite flavored with materialist dialectics².

So Liang Shi went on to discuss probability theory with her. She talked for a long while, and Rainbow seemed to understand but also not quite, nodding her head. "I roughly understand, but I still think not letting little children know anything isn't good."

Liang Shi: "..."

This was probably the "I understand, but I don't accept it" attitude?

Rainbow continued, "It's like how bad people prefer to target little children who don't understand anything. If little children could know more, they would be more guarded and would know that this world has both good people and bad people, instead of naively thinking everyone is good. There are still people in our class who think police officers and doctors are bad people, because when they misbehave, their parents tell them the police will take you away or the doctor will give you shots. So I think..."

She paused, then looked at Liang Shi. "You adults' educational methods all seem to have some problems."

After saying this, she even reached out to pat Liang Shi's shoulder. "Sister Liang Shi, I don't mean to attack you."

Liang Shi: "...?"

Was she just lectured by a little child?

And lectured about how to educate little children?

Liang Shi was shocked.

Before she could recover from the emotional impact of being educated by a little child, Rainbow said, "Sister Liang Shi, Teacher Qi is coming."

Liang Shi woodenly turned around, nodded slightly, and greeted Qi Jiao, "Teacher Qi."

She temporarily set aside the shock that Rainbow had given her.

"Mm." Qi Jiao didn't show any abnormality in front of the little child, gently bending down to ruffle Rainbow's head. "Today our Rainbow can go home early."

Rainbow shook her head, "We're not going home. We're going to eat something delicious first."

Her tone was calm, but Liang Shi could hear a hint of showing off.

"That's fine too." Qi Jiao maintained her gentle smile throughout. "Then our Rainbow should eat a bit more."

Liang Shi could feel that the current Qi Jiao wasn't putting on an act.

She genuinely liked the little child, and seeing the child happy made her very satisfied.

Moreover, the Qi Jiao she saw today was completely different from the one she saw at the mall that day.

When Qi Jiao was beside Aunt Qi, she was panicked, uneasy, and afraid.

But when getting along with little children, she became a different person entirely.

¹ Worldview (三观): In Chinese, this refers to one's outlook on the world, life, and values - essentially one's fundamental beliefs and moral compass.

² Materialist dialectics (唯物辯證主義): A philosophical approach that emphasizes understanding reality through material conditions and contradictions, associated with Marxist philosophy and commonly taught in Chinese education.
