

Chapter 48-4

Liang Shi had previously seen a female celebrity who only graduated elementary school hire someone to ghostwrite an ornately worded sob story essay. There were also PR articles and statements from celebrity studios, all with dedicated ghostwriters.

The manipulative power of such writing need not be mentioned.

In this blog post, Guo Xinran was portrayed as a girl with a tragic background who was positive, optimistic, and understanding.

Especially at the end, what she said to her biological parents was practically stabbing at people's heartstrings.

Who wouldn't feel heartbroken for this girl after reading it?

If Liang Shi weren't standing on the opposing side looking at this today, she would definitely repost this Weibo to help her find her family, and might even donate money to her.

But Liang Shi was still rational at this moment. She searched for a lot of information online.

She discovered that Guo Xinran had posted family-seeking information on multiple platforms, skillfully exploiting people's empathy and the traffic algorithms of the internet age.

Calling her an internet celebrity, Liang Shi would believe it.

And now she also had the trend of becoming an internet celebrity—she had started filming some vlogs with some advertisements in them.

Some people raised questions, but were quickly refuted by her "fans," saying that now that she had lost her relatives, didn't she need to make money to support herself?

Based on her follower count across multiple platforms, her monthly income should be quite substantial now.

After all, being someone from the industry, Liang Shi would think about these issues from multiple angles.

From that blog post, she didn't quite believe the persona Guo Xinran had created for herself.

Too perfect.

That proved there must be flaws.

In everything, she was the victim.

But she was still living with hope, even having to comfort her "parents" in return.

This kind of persona, Liang Shi had only seen in TV dramas.

Logically speaking, with such a big commotion online, the Liang family should be able to see it.

Yet no one had contacted her.

Either no one knew the Liang family had lost a daughter, or the Liang family people didn't pay attention to this type of news, or the token she had wasn't something from the Liang family.

Although that golden Pixiu looked wealthy, the craftsmanship wasn't refined at all.

It didn't seem like a Liang family product.

Moreover, when Guo Xinran went missing, the Liang family business was still thriving.

Being in the luxury goods business, all the jewelry for newborns should be very "extravagant."

Just based on looks alone, it was too unconvincing.

If it weren't for Liang Shi knowing about this matter and being unusually sensitive to it, seeing at first glance that this girl resembled Qiu Zimin.

She also wouldn't suspect that the other party was Qiu Zimin's lost daughter.

Liang Shi used her alternate account to follow Guo Xinran, then sent her a private message: [Have you found your parents? Any leads?]

Guo Xinran's auto-reply was: [Thank you for following me. After I find my parents, I'll share the good news with everyone.]

So she hadn't found them yet.

Liang Shi also wanted to use this time to investigate the ritual matter. She vaguely felt that this mystical ritual event might be related to her transmigration, but it was just speculation.

After all, there was also the system involved.

She didn't know whether the system was more likely or the mystical event was more likely.

But with her arm injured, going to the old mansion tonight was once again out of the question.
