

Chapter 58-2

Liang Shi smiled slightly, "A few days ago when I was researching, I discovered that their company is in talks with Chen Liuying about becoming their spokesperson."

Liang Xinhe: "..."

"Have the relevant person in charge call their company's person responsible for this area. Don't be too direct about it, just subtly hint that Chen Liuying won't work, that she can't be used," Liang Shi said. "You should be quite proficient in this kind of verbal technique—I don't need to teach you, right?"

Liang Xinhe: "..."

He stared at Liang Shi, and after a moment took out his phone, couldn't help but smile, meeting Liang Shi's smiling eyes.

"You've got something," Liang Xinhe said as he went out to make the call.

The remaining people in the office watched her methodically arrange everything.

This included calling Zhao Ying to discuss which direction to steer the online public opinion.

Zhao Ying had extensive connections in the entertainment industry, but she had fashion brand endorsements and couldn't promote anything at this sensitive time.

However, she posted a photo with Zhao Xuning, with the caption: [Today's happy selfie! Dragging my busy cousin away for a moment to do some promotion.]

The extremely beautiful, coldly expressed Zhao Xuning was already wearing Minghui's latest necklace.

And it was very eye-catching.

Many people spontaneously began searching for information about Zhao Xuning's necklace, and finally discovered it was Minghui's new product.

Everyone: ...Instantly shattered.

The celebrity effect was displayed to the fullest at this moment.

However, many people also went to Zhao Ying's Weibo to attack her, saying she was making dirty money, that she was secretly protecting people, but they were all silenced by Zhao Ying's fans' powerful fighting ability.

When it came to fan fighting power, no one in the entertainment industry could compare to Zhao Ying and Yang Shuyan.

Zhao Ying's fans were usually Buddhist¹, either they wouldn't fight you, or if they fought, they'd fight until you were out of the entertainment industry.

Yang Shuyan's fans were ready to fight anytime, anywhere. Of course, they wouldn't fight nobodies—in their words, giving nobodies even one extra glance would be letting them leech off popularity.

So faced with absolute fighting power, those casual fans and Chen Liuying's fans weren't worth mentioning at all.

No one dared to provoke them.

Meanwhile, Minghui Jewelry's new product sales had begun to skyrocket. Being on trending searches meant visibility.

Currently, Minghui's company had limited funds. Xu Qingzhu was someone who strictly controlled product quality, so most of the capital was invested in the products themselves. The funds that could be allocated for marketing and promotion were pitifully small—they could only buy trending searches ranked 30th or lower.

But now it was different!

Top five trending searches, and Minghui's name occupied three of them.

All traffic delivered by their opponents!

Using other people's money to promote their own products—it couldn't be more satisfying!

Quite a few paid commenters were stirring up discussions, the trending page was refreshing rapidly. While some people were cursing, others were praising their product quality and stunning beauty.

So beautiful that it didn't even need words of praise—just posting one picture could amaze people enough to want to check the official website.

Driven by such popularity, autumn new product sales climbed steadily.

This wasn't the end—the most terrifying thing was that Yang Shuyan, who had no endorsement deals, waded into these muddy waters at this time.

She directly posted a giveaway post, giving away Minghui Jewelry's new necklace—the same style that Zhao Xuning was wearing around her neck.

At the same time, she commented: [A junior I haven't contacted in a long time has actually become a designer, must support her]

After Liang Shi saw this, she was shocked and asked Zhao Ying in confusion: "Sister Ying, did you do this?"

Zhao Ying: "...It wasn't me."

Lin Luoxi, who had been sitting quietly in the office, helplessly held her forehead and spoke up: "It was me."

Then she called Yang Shuyan, simple and direct: "Senior, thank you."

Yang Shuyan said from the other end: "You should have said earlier if you needed help. I can't help with other things, but this much I can do."

Lin Luoxi: "Got it, we're still discussing countermeasures here."

"Wait until this heat dies down before issuing the lawyer's letter," Yang Shuyan said. "The heat is high right now."

Lin Luoxi: "Mm, our strategist here said the same thing."

Liang Shi hadn't expected that Lin Luoxi actually knew Yang Shuyan, and that it was the kind of relationship where she could help unconditionally in chaos.

Liang Shi said in amazement: "You actually know Yang Shuyan."

"Mm," Lin Luoxi said. "High school senior."

Liang Shi's gaze seemed to glance over at Xu Qingzhu intentionally or unintentionally, as if thinking of something, but she didn't say anything and continued with her planning.

It had to be said that Yang Shuyan's firm promotional stance made the organic buzz even stronger.

Yang Shuyan's fans' purchasing power was no joke—it was genuinely strong.

So the backend orders exploded.

Currently, Minghui Jewelry was short of money, so Xu Qingzhu had decided early on not to use hunger marketing², and had divided products into several tiers.

The slightly cheaper tiers had already sold out, but there were still continuous pre-orders pouring in.

The internet was vast, with tens of millions to hundreds of millions of people online simultaneously. No matter how loud the cursing voices were, there were countless people staying silent.

And their main purchasing power came from those silent people.

The silent ones were often the majority.

In this environment, Liang Shi had Lin Luoxi also post a Weibo: [No explanation needed, justice will prevail.]

Not long after this Weibo was posted, it was also quickly overrun by netizens in the comments, and shortly after, Bai Weiwei also posted a Weibo.

As Chen Liuying's agent, her Weibo also had over 500,000 followers, and speaking out at such a critical moment meant her attitude represented Chen Liuying's attitude from the side.

¹ Buddhist: In Chinese internet slang, refers to someone who is very laid-back, non-competitive, and goes with the flow

² Hunger marketing: A marketing strategy where companies intentionally create scarcity to increase demand and perceived value
