

Chapter 61-2

//

After she finished the livestream, it was already 11 PM.

Both Minghui Jewelry's online orders and offline orders were being compiled, with total pre-orders exceeding expectations by more than twenty times.

This made Xu Qingzhu feel exceptionally reassured.

Through this battle, Minghui Jewelry had finally welcomed the beginning of its upward trajectory.

The public relations departments of both companies looked at Liang Shi with indescribable expressions.

The reason they could become department heads at major companies wasn't just because of their high academic qualifications, but because they had been battle-tested in the PR industry, handling countless PR cases and successfully resolving most PR crises.

So when dealing with PR crises, they had independent PR systems and processes. Following these methods would definitely prevent mistakes.

But today, someone who could be called a complete PR outsider had not only avoided mistakes, but had achieved what could be called a perfect PR case.

Firmly grasping the evidence, luring the snake out of its hole, waiting for the perfect moment, and striking decisively.

From the evidence chain to timing, including driving traffic to their own company, every link was flawless.

A textbook-level PR approach.

However, Liang Shi didn't think that much. She closed all the backend web pages that were running, then shut her laptop and rubbed her eyes. She had been staring at data all day, and her eyes were dry and sore.

Looking up, she saw the two PR department heads staring at her. Liang Shi was puzzled, "What's wrong?"

It was Minghui's PR head who swallowed his pride and hesitantly asked: "Miss Liang, did you study marketing?"

"Huh?" Liang Shi was surprised: "No, I studied Chinese Language and Literature."

In reality, she was someone who couldn't afford college due to poverty and never got the chance to study.

Speaking of it was always a regret.

Actually, her grades were very good back then, but her grandparents' sudden deaths made her mood extremely terrible.

Without any source of income, she was too thin-skinned to ask teachers for money, so she went straight to work.

Only after experiencing society did she realize that studying was relatively one of the easier paths in this world.

Because you only needed to focus on your grades.

Liang Shi briefly thought about the past, then snapped back to attention, showing a polite smile, "What's wrong?"

The department head was stunned, then told the truth: "Because your handling method was too mature, I thought you had learned from masters, but it turns out you're self-taught. I admire that."

"It's not really self-taught." Liang Shi said.

The department head: "?"

"A few days ago when organizing magazine documents, I read a few books on marketing and PR." Liang Shi said.

She wasn't lying either - she had read those books.

But they weren't very useful.

Just like students can learn as much as they want from textbooks, no matter how fancy, they still need to selectively apply it to reality.

Otherwise, it's just waste paper.

Even if you work in a related industry, you might not necessarily be able to use that knowledge.

Textbooks are just the tip of the iceberg of an industry.

What Liang Shi had came from learning in society.

She stood on the shoulders of giants.

But she couldn't tell them this, so she'd let these two department heads think she was a self-taught genius.

Although this would deal a crushing blow to the two department heads.

Sure enough, after hearing her words, the department head's expression became even more indescribable, and he could only let out a long sigh.

Liang Xinhe glanced at Dongheng's PR department head Wu Sheng, who had made snide remarks when Liang Shi proposed suggestions, but now Liang Shi had proven with actions that her plan was the best.

Wu Sheng was incredulous.

Liang Xinhe then called him out: "Director Wu, how do you think this PR campaign went?"

The named Wu Sheng: "Huh?"

He was stunned, then said: "Very perfect."

These four words could only be applied to very few PR campaigns.

After all, in the PR industry, you need keen insight, control over timing, and so much more. It's hard for anyone to dare say their PR campaign was perfect.

Because if someone else were to do it, there might be an even more perfect solution.

But what Liang Shi proposed this time could indeed be called perfect.

Using the opponent's character flaws, giving them no chance and hammering them to death.

She could also layout everything in the process, guiding everything toward a favorable direction.

Without ten years of online research, you couldn't make such precise judgments.

Liang Xinhe glanced at Wu Sheng, his tone light: "Director Wu, I think that there are always people better than us, and there's always a higher mountain. People shouldn't be too arrogant, don't you think?"

Director Wu: "....."

He was left red-faced by the comment.

"Some people are just naturally smart, able to draw inferences and make connections." Liang Xinhe raised an eyebrow, "You can't forget she's originally a tiger just because she's been acting like a cat for a few years, right? Moreover, I think people need to courageously acknowledge their shortcomings to improve better, don't you think?"

Director Wu: "....."

Every "don't you think" was clearly meant to make him realize his mistake.

Director Wu's face heated up, but he still sincerely apologized to Liang Shi: "Third Miss, I'm sorry. My perspective was too narrow."

"It's fine, it's fine." Liang Shi immediately said.

As she spoke, she looked at Liang Xinhe, feeling he was being too harsh on an elderly employee who had worked at Dongheng for decades.

But Liang Xinhe didn't think so - he raised his chin, looking quite proud.

Liang Shi: "....."

After this battle was fought, everyone was physically and mentally exhausted.

Liang Shi very politely thanked each person, then saw everyone off one by one.

Even to Zhou Yi'an, she expressed her gratitude.

Zhou Yi'an looked at her and left without saying a word.

Finally, only she and Xu Qingzhu remained.

The two stood in front of Minghui Jewelry's office building. It was nearly midnight, and everything was quiet.

The office building was already shrouded in darkness.
