

Chapter 74-6

Shen Hui's tone of voice would rise at the end, carrying a hint of teasing, "My darling wife is angry again."

"Zhao Xuning, don't be mad anymore."

"Ningning wife, come here for a kiss, don't be angry anymore, okay?"

"Wife, I was wrong... really wrong."

"Ningning wife, let me prepare a gift for you."

"....."

Zhao Xuning was the unmovable aloof flower of the school, always alone year after year, without many friends, with only Shen Hui by her side.

Looking back, during those days of dating, it had always been Shen Hui accommodating her.

What she had done for Shen Hui seemed insignificant.

Back then, she still had the arrogance of a spirited youth, having been spoiled by those around her since childhood.

She came from an excellent family background and was also beautiful. There were quite a few girls who gave her love letters.

So there was no need to treat Shen Hui too well—she would love her anyway.

Moreover, she clearly knew that she and Shen Hui probably couldn't get married.

Her parents would never accept her marrying someone without any background.

From the day she could start dating, the concept her parents had instilled in her was that dating could be casual, but marriage must be with someone of equal social standing.¹

At first, she was just playing around. After dating for two years, during a meal, she took the initiative to mention to her parents that she might marry a girl without much background in the future.

Her father flew into a rage, and a shard from the bowl he threw cut the side of her neck.

When she returned here, Shen Hui treated her wound and said to her, "Wife, give me a kiss, it won't hurt after a kiss."

.....

It seemed like all the beautiful memories happened here.

Every word Shen Hui had once written for her was so vivid, automatically read out in Shen Hui's tender and coquettish voice.

Back then, she wasn't yet covered in thorns.

When did things start to change?

Between them...

¹ "門當戶對" (mén dāng hù duì) - A traditional Chinese concept meaning that marriage should be between families of equal social and economic status. Literally referring to the decorative elements on doors and gates that indicated a family's status, this phrase emphasizes that partners should come from similar backgrounds in terms of wealth, education, and social standing.
