

Chapter 77-7

//

During breakfast, Sheng Linlang watched Liang Shi and Xu Qingzhu with a satisfied expression, piling lots of food onto Liang Shi's plate and reminding her to eat more.

Unable to refuse such warm hospitality, Liang Shi... ate a little too much.

So in the morning, it was Xu Qingzhu who drove her car to drop her off at work, before heading to her own company.

The little episode from last night was glossed over, but Liang Shi got a definite answer from Xu Qingzhu—she said she was going to reunite with the Su family.

However, Su Zhe had given her a choice between two options, but Xu Qingzhu said: "I want both."

When she said this, she was very confident, leaving Liang Shi staring in awe.

Liang Shi then expressed her support.

Liang Shi had already gotten the hang of things at the company, but she still prepared her resignation letter and handed it to Zhou Li on Thursday.

Li Ran happened to see this and asked with some regret: "Are you really leaving?"

"Mm." Liang Shi said: "The boot ceremony¹ for Mo Mo Mo Mo Mo is next week. I'm joining the production crew."

"So soon?" Li Ran said: "What a pity. I thought I could spend another month with you. I've gotten used to having you here."

"We can still keep in touch." Liang Shi smiled.

Li Ran patted her shoulder and grabbed a notebook from the desk: "Future big star, come sign your name for me."

Liang Shi casually signed her name on the paper.

Li Ran took one look and was amazed: "Oh wow, you've practiced this, haven't you?"

Liang Shi smiled without saying anything.

She had signed so many autographs before that she didn't need to practice her signature anymore.

But after Zhou Li received her resignation letter, she held the envelope in her hand and thought for a moment before answering: "Your situation is a bit special, so I need to ask the higher-ups. Do you want to ask yourself, or should I ask for you?"

As soon as Liang Shi heard this, she knew she needed to go find Liang Xinhe first.

So she took back her resignation letter and didn't make things difficult for Zhou Li: "Sister Li, I'll go myself."

So before the end of the workday that afternoon, she went up to the General Manager's office.

She knocked on the door when entering. A voice from inside said to come in. Liang Xinhe had her back to Liang Shi and thought it was the secretary coming in, so she didn't pay attention and continued her phone call: "Look into this company called Zuoye Culture."

A moment later, she added: "My little sister is at this company and wants to terminate her contract now."

"Why is their contract so exploitative? The termination fee is ten million."

"I have the money, but I don't want to give it to them."

"Anyway, look into it. Also, the artists under their company—dig up any dirt you can find on them."

"....."

Liang Shi stood there listening and keenly sensed something. She took out her phone and searched for Guo Xinran on Weibo.²

The bio that popped up had already changed to: Zuoye Culture contracted artist, girl searching for family.

Her Weibo ID hadn't changed yet, but her latest post read: Sharing some good news with everyone. Although it's not confirmed yet, I think I've found my biological parents. They contacted me through the local committee, and they're coming here tomorrow. Even though it's just a possibility, I'm still so happy. This all feels like a dream. When I received their phone call, I couldn't believe it. I'll share more good news with everyone later.

This post had been published the night before last, and the comments were full of blessings and congratulations, along with wishes for her to find her parents soon.

After this post, she hadn't posted anything else.

There were still many people following her family search progress.

Liang Shi put away her phone and immediately understood.

Liang Xinhe also turned around, and upon seeing it was her, she froze for a moment, then asked somewhat stiffly: "When did you get here?"

Liang Shi said: "Just arrived."

She maintained the dignity of an adult and simply handed over the resignation letter: "I'm resigning."

¹ "Boot ceremony" (開機儀式, kāi jī yí shì) - A traditional ceremony held before the start of filming a TV drama or movie in China. It typically involves burning incense and making offerings to pray for a smooth and successful production. The term literally means "turning on the machine ceremony," referring to when the cameras officially start rolling.

² Weibo - A Chinese microblogging platform similar to Twitter, widely used for social networking and following celebrities in China.