

Chapter 86-1

Gu Yixue.

Liang Shi quietly murmured these three characters, finding them rather pleasant to the ear.

The person was just like her name—full of charm and allure.

However...

"Wait." Liang Shi called out to her, taking a tissue from her pocket and handing it over, pointing at her shoulder from a distance. "You should wipe that."

"Where?" Gu Yixue was startled.

Liang Shi pointed at her shoulder again—there were two black marks on it that looked like something had fallen there.

From this distance, she couldn't see clearly.

Gu Yixue pulled down her black spaghetti strap, and the slip dress instantly transformed into an off-shoulder evening gown. Liang Shi averted her eyes and didn't look.

Unexpectedly, Gu Yixue chuckled lightly, "This is a tattoo."

Liang Shi: "..."

From her angle, Gu Yixue was backlit. The woman had an enchantingly alluring face, and when she smiled faintly, those fox-like eyes lifted at the corners—the kind of beauty that would captivate you even if it wasn't your type.

Around her neck hung a silver necklace with blue diamonds, as if it contained an entire starry sky.

Only now did Liang Shi see clearly the marks on her shoulder—three crooked black lines.

One of them had been covered by her black strap.

It was quite rare for someone to get a black tattoo.

This time, Liang Shi had misjudged.

Liang Shi withdrew the tissue and apologized in a low voice, "Sorry, I saw wrong."

"No problem." Gu Yixue's accent carried a hint of the Beijing dialect¹, and her use of *erhua*² sounded very natural. For Liang Shi, who had once worked hard in the capital city, it was quite pleasant to hear.

After Gu Yixue pulled down the strap on her left shoulder, she pointed at the three marks and asked Liang Shi, "Do they look good?"

Liang Shi: "..."

After a moment of silence, Liang Shi gave a universal answer: "Not bad."

Gu Yixue smiled, restored the strap to its original position, and casually brushed her loose hair over, covering part of the marks.

"This is wind," Gu Yixue said with a smile. "The unpredictable wind."

Liang Shi was puzzled. "Then why is it black?"

Gu Yixue's brows furrowed slightly, then she curved her lips into a smile, looking quite bewitching. "Because I like black."

After saying this, she waved at her. "Liang Shi, right? I'll remember you. If fate brings us together again, I'll treat you to a meal. But right now, I really have to go."

Liang Shi smiled too. "Alright."

She didn't refuse this offer, nor did she tease her about it.

Because both of them knew they would probably never meet again.

Haizhou City was so big, and this was Liang Shi's first time coming to this place.

It would probably be the last time too.

Where would they possibly run into each other?

Still, this person was quite interesting.

Liang Shi rubbed the lighter in her hand, then took out her phone and instinctively searched for the name Gu Yixue. There was no information at all.

What a pity.

At first, Liang Shi had thought she was some celebrity.

With such beautiful poise, it was a waste not to play femme fatale³ roles.

Footnotes:

¹ Beijing dialect (京腔, jīng qiāng): A distinctive accent and speaking style associated with Beijing, China's capital city. It's often considered a prestigious or cultured way of speaking in Chinese culture.

² Erhua (兒化音): A phonological feature characteristic of Mandarin Chinese spoken in Beijing and northern China, where an "r" sound (represented by 兒) is added to the end of syllables. It gives speech a distinctive, sometimes considered more casual or authentic Beijing sound.

³ Femme fatale (蛇蝎美人, shé xiē měi rén): Literally translates to "snake and scorpion beauty" in Chinese—a term describing a dangerously attractive woman who uses her beauty to manipulate or harm others, similar to the Western concept of a femme fatale.
