

Chapter 94-2

//

Meanwhile, Liang Shi was in a decent mood. She had slept well at night, dreamless the entire time.

It was just that after getting up and seeing those messages she had sent last night, listening to her own voice messages again, she felt especially irritating.

She converted them to text, took a screenshot, and sent it to Zhao Xuning, asking along the way: [Don't you find it very familiar?]

Zhao Xuning: [?]

Liang Shi: [It won't kill you to type one more word, Dr. Zhao.]

Zhao Xuning: [Who sent this to you?]

Liang Shi: [I sent it to someone else.]

Zhao Xuning had already typed "This person is sick" in the chat box, but after seeing Liang Shi's sentence, she deleted it again.

Zhao Xuning: [Pretty funny.]

Liang Shi: [.....Yay.]

Liang Shi looked at the messages, thinking: Zhao Xuning had no idea about her own invisible "show-off" aura.

Meanwhile Zhao Xuning, having just left home, thought: Liang Shi might really be sick, in the literal sense.

The two of them internally dissed each other first thing in the morning, but the other party was completely unaware, so they could still maintain their superficial plastic friendship.

After getting up, Liang Shi first went to the kitchen and found no one there. The bathroom door was closed, with the sound of running water.

This was an ordinary, uneventful morning, like many of their previous days.

The sunlight was just right, casting brightness and warmth into the room.

Looking out through the clean windows, there was an azure sky. Standing by the window looking down, below was heavy traffic, constantly flowing river water, and pedestrians hurrying to work in the early morning.

An ordinary life was the greatest romance for ordinary people.

Liang Shi went to the kitchen to wash her hands and began cooking breakfast.

She first opened the refrigerator to look, discovering that the vegetables they had stocked up on before were almost eaten up. There was also only one slice of bread left at home, not even enough for two people to simply share.

So they still needed to go shopping today.

Xu Qingzhu had to go to work. After Xu Qingzhu left for work, she would go to the supermarket to buy things.

Liang Shi was about to join the production crew soon and needed to prepare sufficient living supplies for Xu Qingzhu. She made a list in her mind again.

Breakfast was barley porridge and steamed buns bought from downstairs. Finding it too troublesome, Liang Shi casually tied her hair into a bun, didn't really worry about her appearance, put on a long windbreaker and went downstairs to buy steamed buns. On the way back, the wind was blowing and she even sneezed. While eating, she reminded Xu Qingzhu to dress warmer.

Meanwhile, Xu Qingzhu stared at her with a ghostly gaze. Liang Shi looked back innocently. "What's wrong?"

Xu Qingzhu smiled. "I'm wearing a turtleneck sweater."

Liang Shi nodded: "I saw that. What I mean is you could wear a thicker coat on top. You have one, right?"

Xu Qingzhu pulled down her turtleneck sweater. "What I mean is, you made me have to wear a turtleneck sweater."

On her neck was clearly the hickey Liang Shi had left last night, a particularly obvious one that hair couldn't hide at all.

It had the same remarkable effect as the one she had given Liang Shi that day.

Liang Shi: "....."

She coughed awkwardly. She never expected Xu Qingzhu would bring this matter up. For her, it was something to keep tightly hidden, to remain a beautiful misunderstanding after getting drunk, something she absolutely didn't dare bring up while sober.

But since Xu Qingzhu had brought it up, Liang Shi pressed her lips together and pointed at the mark on her own neck that hadn't faded yet.

She didn't speak, but the meaning was obvious—didn't you also do this to me? Returning the favor.

Xu Qingzhu took a sip of porridge and swallowed it slowly, then lightly hummed. "That day you drank too much and asked me to bite you."

Liang Shi: "....."

"Teacher Xu." Liang Shi said ghostily: "Do you think I'm like you?"

Xu Qingzhu: "?"

"I remember everything after getting drunk." Liang Shi said: "You blackout, I don't."

Xu Qingzhu: "....."

She looked at Liang Shi with a smile, but her tone carried a threatening quality. Combined with her smile of death, it inexplicably made Liang Shi's spine go cold.

"So Teacher Liang, does having more invalid memories help?" Xu Qingzhu said: "What else do you remember? Was it that after getting drunk, you thought it was a dream so you let someone bite....."

"Stop!" Liang Shi urgently interrupted. Even her ears turned red. "Teacher Xu, I surrender. Eat your food. Don't you still have to go to work soon?"

"I can go a bit late." Xu Qingzhu said: "I have time to clarify this issue with you."

Liang Shi: "....."

She readily admitted defeat and quickly changed the subject: "Teacher Xu, eat your food. Eat more."

After Xu Qingzhu finished eating, she was about to wash the dishes, but Liang Shi told her to put them down. Along the way, she asked if there was anything Xu Qingzhu needed to buy—she was planning to go to the supermarket in a bit.

"Buy some candy and small snacks." Xu Qingzhu said: "In case Ling Dang, Sheng Yu, or Rainbow come over as guests, we always need something to serve them."

These few little guests were quite likely to come over.

Liang Shi glanced at the somewhat small house. If all three children came over at the same time, the house might not even fit them all.

She hesitated for a moment and asked: "Teacher Xu, do you think this house is small?"

"It's alright." After finishing her meal, Xu Qingzhu got up to go to the room to change clothes. "Why?"

"Should we move to a bigger house?" Liang Shi took out the key Liang Xinzhou had given her. "It's in this same complex, a house Big Brother gave me."

Xu Qingzhu asked: "Which building is it in?"

"The one next to the one next door." Liang Shi said: "I haven't gone to see it yet, but it should be bigger than this one."

Xu Qingzhu paused, then shook her head in refusal. "Never mind. Moving once a week, all our time would be wasted on moving."

"I can take care of this, I'll handle it." Liang Shi said: "You just need to pack your clothes and put them in a suitcase. I can do everything else. I'll finish moving before joining the crew."

Xu Qingzhu stood at the bedroom door, looking at her ghostily: "So then I'll be living alone in such a big space?"

Liang Shi: "....."

Wasn't it the same before at Shallow Water Bay?

"Never mind." Xu Qingzhu said: "A smaller one is better. It's just the two of us anyway. After you leave, I'll be alone. Living here won't feel especially empty."

Inexplicably, Liang Shi heard a sense of loneliness from Xu Qingzhu's words and immediately said: "Then when I don't have many scenes, I'll come back to stay at night."

Xu Qingzhu closed the door. Her voice was cut off by the door panel. "Whatever you want."

Her tone was indifferent, impossible to tell if she was happy or angry, with no expectation to speak of.

Liang Shi sat there, her mood somewhat low. She looked around and discovered that although they had only moved here a few days ago, the house was already filled with their small belongings—fresh flowers in the vase on the table, keychains hanging by the door. Moving was indeed a troublesome thing.

A small space wouldn't feel empty.

Liang Shi felt that what Xu Qingzhu said also made sense.

So she put away the key, planning to go take a look when she came back today to see what this house actually looked like.
