

Chapter 28-2

After Yin Lingzhu left, she walked toward Yan Si's room.

The person who had been watching Yan Si and Yin Lingzhu through the window earlier was her.

She pushed open the door. When Yan Si saw it was her, she frowned with some disgust.

"What are you doing here?" Yan Si's eyes were full of wariness.

"Look at you, you've had her for a year, it's time to let go." Ming Qingyun looked at her, completely unlike how she appeared in front of Yin Lingzhu.

Hearing her words, Yan Si retorted, "She and I haven't divorced yet. I advise you not to do anything illegal."

Yan Si's eyes flickered—she wasn't sure what Yin Lingzhu was thinking deep down.

If she wanted to go with Ming Qingyun, what should she do?

Ming Qingyun sat down next to Yan Si, "A year ago, after she terminated her contract with that company, she suddenly disappeared without a trace. I felt something was wrong then."

"Yan Si, oh Yan Si, just because you don't want her doesn't mean others don't want her."

Ming Qingyun's eyes looked at her coldly.

"I love her." Yan Si also met her gaze without backing down, "So I won't let go."

Ming Qingyun's brow furrowed tightly, "You still dare to say you love her? Which of the things you've done could be called loving her?"

"You extracted her pheromones and nearly killed her on that machine—is that loving her? You cheated—is that loving her?"

"Those were mistakes I made in the past. I will make amends to her." Yan Si's eyes were full of stubbornness, "But don't think I don't know what you've done."

"I was wrong, but you're no better." Yan Si glared fiercely at Ming Qingyun, secretly clenching her fists.

The atmosphere between the two gradually sparked with tension.

Ming Qingyun's expression was contemptuous, "You're talking about that company matter, aren't you?"

Yan Si hadn't expected her to have this attitude, "You instructed someone to change the penalty amount in the contract."

"And if I'm not mistaken, that Rong Yu¹ was also your arrangement."

"Yan Si, what right do you have to lecture me?" Ming Qingyun looked at her disdainfully, "At least I didn't harm her. What about you?"

Yan Si was speechless, blocked by her words. This was an undeniable fact, and also something she regretted.

Yan Si suppressed the guilt from having her sore spot touched, "Ha, regardless, she's still my wife in name."

"Not for much longer—you're getting divorced." Ming Qingyun's eyes showed triumph as she dropped this line and left.

Yan Si, left behind, watched her retreating figure and felt an inexplicable sense of crisis.

She knew she was attractive, but Ming Qingyun wasn't lacking in looks either.

Her family background was good, but Ming Qingyun had built her own company through her own efforts, which wasn't inferior either.

From every angle, compared to Ming Qingyun, her advantages weren't very obvious.

Should she really give up on Yin Lingzhu?

That previous thought surfaced again.

If Yin Lingzhu chose Ming Qingyun, what should she do?

From the bottom of her heart, Yan Si was unwilling to think about this answer, but she also knew that if Yin Lingzhu truly didn't choose her, then she had no other option.

The sense of crisis in Yan Si's heart overwhelmed her—she couldn't accept Yin Lingzhu choosing someone else.

Yin Lingzhu was called over by the assistant director and discovered there was another person beside him.

She stood demurely next to the director. When she saw Yin Lingzhu approach, her face turned red and she looked quite shy.

Yin Lingzhu couldn't help but look at her a few more times.

"Hello, I'm the screenwriter for 'By Heaven²'." Her face was flushed red, and her eyes didn't dare look at Yin Lingzhu.

The assistant director saw the screenwriter's appearance and spoke for her, "She's your fan and feels a bit embarrassed meeting you."

Hearing the assistant director's explanation, Yin Lingzhu nodded, her gaze falling on the screenwriter's face.

She always felt something was off about the screenwriter's behavior, but couldn't pinpoint what exactly was wrong.

Looking more carefully, she noticed the screenwriter's face was indeed red, and her eyes still didn't dare meet hers directly.

She suspected she was overthinking it.

"Nice to meet you." Yin Lingzhu smiled at her, then turned to look at the assistant director, "Assistant Director, what did you need me for?"

"It's like this—you have many scenes, but considering you've never acted before, the screenwriter wants to discuss with you about your character's storyline."

"If you feel any part is unsuitable, just tell the screenwriter directly and we can change it."

It was still about her acting skills.

The assistant director had made it very clear—any scenes she felt she couldn't perform would be directly deleted, and her screen time wouldn't be reduced.

Yin Lingzhu felt it wasn't necessary. Even though her glands were damaged, she was still an Alpha after all, and her physical condition was still very good.

She could personally perform some high-difficulty action scenes. The only challenging aspect was her acting skills.

As the assistant director said, this was her first time acting, so she lacked experience in performance.

"It's getting late now. After you both have dinner, have a chat."

The golden sunset light fell on the ground, bringing no warmth at all.

"Alright." Yin Lingzhu and the screenwriter agreed in unison.

No one noticed that a barely perceptible glint flashed in the eyes of the screenwriter, who had been keeping her head down.
