

Chapter 29-1

Yin Lingzhu sat on the sofa in front of the table, watching the screenwriter beside her who was helping to modify the script. She felt the air was filled with awkwardness.

She licked her dry lips, inexplicably feeling somewhat thirsty.

The screenwriter noticed her action, "Let me get you a bottle of water."

Yin Lingzhu originally wanted to say she would get it herself.

But looking around, there were not only no disposable cups on the table, but not even a kettle.

In a hotel room, even if the screenwriter thought the hotel's things might be a bit dirty, at most she wouldn't use them—there was no need to hide them away.

It felt a bit strange.

Yin Lingzhu thought this calmly without showing it on her face.

Her gaze fixed on the screenwriter's movements.

The screenwriter brought out a bottle of mineral water for her, "Miss Yin, this is all I have here."

Yin Lingzhu reached out to take it, "That's fine, just focus on your work, don't mind me."

She looked at the bottle—it was a brand she had never encountered before.

Her hand went to the cap. The cap required quite a bit of effort to unscrew, and there were no signs it had been opened previously.

This made Yin Lingzhu relax slightly.

The slightly cool water stimulated Yin Lingzhu's brain, not only relieving her dry mouth but also making her mind much clearer.

The taste was slightly sweet, making Yin Lingzhu raise her eyebrows slightly.

"Where did you buy this water?" Yin Lingzhu asked the screenwriter.

The screenwriter pushed up the glasses on her nose bridge, hiding the excitement in her eyes.

"I bought it randomly, I don't remember." The screenwriter's face still looked shy, the same as before, with her face full of blush.

Yin Lingzhu looked at her appearance and was about to smile and say it was fine, but she noticed that the person in front of her was gradually becoming blurry.

"You... what is this bottle of water?" Yin Lingzhu said weakly, her brain gradually becoming unclear.

"Miss Yin, please don't blame me. I'm just taking people's money to do their work." The screenwriter looked with satisfaction at her slumped over the table, the curve of her mouth growing wider.

【Boss, mission accomplished.】

The screenwriter took out her phone, aimed it at the unconscious Yin Lingzhu, took a photo, and sent it to someone named Yan Yuan¹.

The response was quick—her bank account information immediately popped up.

Looking at her account balance, the screenwriter smiled happily.

The Yan family really was wealthy.

But the screenwriter didn't stay long either. After moving Yin Lingzhu to her bed, she immediately left.

At the same time, Yan Si and Ming Qingyun both received a text message.

【Yin Lingzhu is at XX Hotel room 7104~ The hotel door isn't locked~ You'd better hurry~】

There was also a photo—the one the screenwriter had taken of Yin Lingzhu unconscious.

Yan Si looked at the photo, seeing Yin Lingzhu's obviously wrong condition, and clenched her fists.

Yan Yuan.

His boldness was growing by the day. After she hadn't been at the company for a while, he dared to pull this kind of stunt.

While Yan Si and Ming Qingyun anxiously left their respective locations and rushed to the hotel, Yin Lingzhu opened her eyes in the room.

She covered her eyes with her hand, the heat continuously surging from within her body making it impossible to think.

The burning sensation kept assaulting her rationality, her mind feeling like it was on fire.

She struggled to support herself on the bed with her hands, using her arm strength to prop herself up.

Following her memory, she stumbled toward the bathroom.

She pressed the button, and cold water slowly flowed from the faucet, but the flow was extremely slow.

She had to first place her hand under the outlet. The ice-cold water hit her palm, giving her brief clarity.

She looked at herself in the mirror—flushed face, dazed eyes.

What exactly did that screenwriter want to do?

If only she hadn't drunk that bottle of water.

Yin Lingzhu was extremely regretful. She had vaguely sensed something was wrong with the screenwriter but still let her guard down.

Soon, her hand in the water could no longer maintain her consciousness.

A massive wave of heat surged over her again, drowning her rationality.

Her brain craved cold objects frantically—this desire was almost driving her insane.

She couldn't care that the bathtub wasn't full yet and lay down in it fully clothed.

The large-area contact with cold water restored Yin Lingzhu's rationality once more.

She felt for her phone in her pocket—it was already soaked in water.

Yin Lingzhu's heart skipped a beat as she hurriedly took out her phone.

The moment she pressed the power button, the screen lit up under Yin Lingzhu's hopeful gaze.

She quickly unlocked it and found her contacts.

Looking through the list, she still sent a message to Ji Jingrong².

【Help me, I'm at XX Hotel room 7041, I think I've been drugged.】

After sending the message to Ji Jingrong, Yin Lingzhu's gaze fell on You Xiaoxiao's name.

You Xiaoxiao, although a doctor, had a relationship with Yan Si that made Yin Lingzhu hesitate.

Just as Yin Lingzhu was pondering whether to send a message to You Xiaoxiao, another wave of heat surged through her body.

The heat wave in Yin Lingzhu's brain struck again, causing her to lose her rationality. Her phone crashed into the water with a splash.

Yan Si anxiously found room 7041. When she reached the door and turned the handle, it was indeed unlocked.

Yan Si frowned tightly. She had noticed that Yan Yuan's text mentioned 【you all】 .

She could only hope the other person hadn't arrived before her.

Suddenly hearing a sound, Yan Si anxiously ran in that direction. Pushing open the bathroom door, she saw a scene she would never forget.

Yin Lingzhu was lying in the bathtub, her thin clothes soaked and clinging obediently to their owner.

The tight areas revealed skin tone, and at the waterline, there were even hints of pink, looking like peaches that were ripe but not quite, silently emanating a fresh fragrance.

Large expanses of fair skin were exposed, nakedly displaying her beautiful waist.

Yan Si was captivated by this scene and froze there.

After a long moment, she finally reacted and slammed the door shut.

The sound of the door hitting the frame awakened a bit of Yin Lingzhu's consciousness.

She followed the sound, looking toward the bathroom door.

The bathroom door was made of glass material, and Yin Lingzhu could vaguely make out that someone was outside.

She lightly patted her face, trying to clear her muddled mind.

"Is that Jingrong? Just come in." Yin Lingzhu said, adjusting her clothes.

She had just noticed that her clothes had shifted, exposing her waist.

After speaking, there was still no movement from outside.

She looked at the doorway with some confusion—there was indeed a figure outside, though looking carefully, the build didn't seem like Ji Jingrong's.

But through a layer of glass, plus her current condition, she naturally assumed she was seeing things wrong.

She had only told Ji Jingrong about her situation, so the person coming here should only be Ji Jingrong.

Thinking this, she called out to the door again, "Just come in."

Hearing Yin Lingzhu's words, Yan Si could tell that Yin Lingzhu had mistaken her for someone else, so she lingered at the door, not daring to enter.

But she could also see Yin Lingzhu's condition. Although she wouldn't use such underhanded methods herself, she knew a thing or two about them.

Footnotes:

¹ Yan Yuan (宴遠): Based on context, this appears to be a relative of Yan Si's (likely her brother mentioned earlier) who orchestrated this scheme

² Ji Jingrong (季景容): This appears to be the full name of the character previously referred to as "Ji Jingrong" or "Season Jingrong"