

Chapter 30-2

The next day, when Yin Lingzhu woke up, she saw You Xiaoxiao in a white coat standing in front of her.

Seeing that she was awake, You Xiaoxiao said indifferently, "There's nothing seriously wrong with your body. You can be discharged this afternoon."

After You Xiaoxiao finished speaking, she originally wanted to leave, but when she saw Yan Si enter, she stopped in her tracks.

"Were you the one who took me to the hospital?" Yin Lingzhu looked at Yan Si, asking somewhat uncertainly.

Her memories from last night were really too chaotic. She vaguely saw Yan Si, but she wasn't very sure about it.

She didn't know if that was her own hallucination.

Hearing her somewhat confused voice, Yan Si showed nothing on her face, but in her heart she was already mostly certain that Yin Lingzhu didn't remember what happened last night.

Unable to tell if what she felt was sadness or secret delight, she nodded, "It was me."

Yin Lingzhu said "Oh" and didn't speak.

Seeing her reaction was so cold, You Xiaoxiao became displeased instead.

"If it weren't for Sisi¹, you would have been in great danger last night."

You Xiaoxiao said, looking like she couldn't stand it.

Listening to her words, Yin Lingzhu looked up at her, "The way you put it, it sounds like it's my fault instead."

"Why was I drugged last night? Doesn't Yan Si know clearly?" Although Yin Lingzhu's tone was calm, the questioning intent was very obvious.

You Xiaoxiao didn't know the reason behind it, but seeing how Yan Si said nothing, she could roughly guess some of the situation.

"Fine, your affairs are none of my business to meddle in." You Xiaoxiao said while retreating toward the door.

She had been too impulsive. Was Yan Si someone who needed her to speak up for her?

Yan Si had even come to deliver food to someone, did she still need her to speak up?

Thinking this way, You Xiaoxiao walked out the door. Let them sort out their own affairs.

It had nothing to do with her anyway.

Yan Si placed the lunch box she was carrying on the bedside table, gently taking out all the food, "These are all good for the stomach."

"You should eat a little."

Yin Lingzhu closed her eyes, not looking at her, "Thank you. Just staying away from me would be enough."

Yan Si's lips trembled slightly, and she silently walked out of the hospital room.

Yin Lingzhu lay on the bed, feeling that her hands and tongue were unexpectedly sore. She didn't think much of it, just considering it aftereffects.

After closing her eyes, her ears became particularly sensitive.

She heard Yan Si's departing footsteps, but after a while, she heard another set of footsteps coming in.

She frowned and opened her eyes, her eyes full of impatience, "Are you done—"

Before she could finish her words, she couldn't say the rest.

It was Ji Jingrong who had come.

"It's you." Yin Lingzhu spoke with apology, "I'm sorry, I thought it was someone else."

Ji Jingrong revealed a smile, showing no sign of anger on her face, "It's alright, I understand."

"I brought you some breakfast. See if it suits your taste."

Ji Jingrong was about to place the lunch box on the table when she saw that the table surface was already full of food.

She stood there holding the lunch box, looking somewhat awkward.

"Don't worry about that food, just push it aside." Yin Lingzhu said, looking at the breakfast Yan Si had brought.

However, Ji Jingrong didn't do that. She found a corner of the table and placed down the lunch box she had brought.

"When I went to the company today, my supervisor gave me an opportunity to go on a business trip to S City² for training."

Although Yin Lingzhu found what Ji Jingrong said a bit strange, she didn't think much of it, taking it as joy between friends.

Ji Jingrong hesitated for a moment, then finally spoke the words that had been weighing on her mind for a long time.

"If you want, I can choose not to go."

Hearing her say this, Yin Lingzhu didn't react for a moment, "What do you mean by that? Of course I hope you get better and better. Why wouldn't I want you to go?"

Seeing that Yin Lingzhu didn't understand her meaning, Ji Jingrong fell silent for a while.

Finally, with the determination of burning one's bridges³, "I like you. If you're willing, I can stay in X City to be with you."

As if afraid her request was too much, she hurriedly added, "Even if you don't like me, it doesn't matter. As long as you say one word, I can refuse the company."

Yin Lingzhu was stunned by her words, staring at her blankly, unable to say a word.

Yan Si and You Xiaoxiao were at the door, their ears pressed tightly against the door.

Hearing Ji Jingrong say this, You Xiaoxiao looked at Yan Si.

But Yan Si's expression showed no change, her face remaining indifferent.

She looked completely unconcerned.

You Xiaoxiao gave a thumbs up. Even when a rival had said such things, she still wasn't worried.

Footnotes:

¹ Sisi: A nickname/pet name for Yan Si (宴思). The "Si" part of her name is repeated as an affectionate diminutive, similar to how "思思" (Sisi) works in Chinese.

² S City: In Chinese web novels, cities are often referred to by single letters (like S市, B市, etc.) rather than actual city names, likely for creative freedom and to avoid real-world associations.

³ Burning one's bridges: The Chinese idiom "破釜沉舟" literally means "break the cauldrons and sink the boats," referring to an ancient military strategy of destroying one's means of retreat to show total commitment to victory. It's equivalent to the English "burning one's bridges" or "point of no return."