

Chapter 47-1

Yin Lingzhu gazed at Yan Si standing at her door, leaning casually against the doorframe.

"What are you here for?" Yin Lingzhu's lips curved in a smile.

Yan Si looked at her and tucked a strand of her fallen hair behind her ear.

"I have some questions about the script that I'd like to ask you."

Yin Lingzhu's smile froze. What Yan Si had said—she couldn't quite process it.

Yan Si was actually saying she had script problems and wanted to ask her about them.

Was there something wrong with Yan Si's brain?

"You have questions to ask me?" Yin Lingzhu raised an eyebrow. "Are you sure you haven't got the wrong person?"

Under Yin Lingzhu's puzzled and expectant gaze, Yan Si shook her head. "I haven't got the wrong person."

"Well then, I'm afraid I can't teach you anything. Please go back." Yin Lingzhu stepped back with one leg, hiding her body behind the door as she prepared to close it.

There was a hint of pleading in Yan Si's eyes. "For the sake of the inhibitors, please help me this once."

Yin Lingzhu's palm had just touched the door handle when she immediately stopped.

She knew it—favors were hard to repay.

"Then come in." Yin Lingzhu could only change the direction of her force and pull the door open a bit wider.

Yin Lingzhu and Yan Si sat side by side on the sofa.

The distance between them was less than fifty centimeters—very close.

Yin Lingzhu looked at the script spread out in front of her, but in reality, she hadn't absorbed a single word.

The scent of roses lingered around her nose—faint, yet impossible to ignore.

She quietly held her breath, trying to block out this particularly alluring fragrance.

But she also knew she was doing something futile. The scent seemed to permeate her very soul.

The rose fragrance seemed to invade her nerves from every direction.

Yan Si opened her own script and placed it side by side with Yin Lingzhu's.

Her finger lightly tapped, landing on a specific part of the script.

Yin Lingzhu followed her gaze and saw the text there.

She concentrated and roughly understood this plot—it was the scene where the scholar rushed into the fire to save the princess.

Yan Si's voice rang out in the quiet hotel room, carrying the richness and brilliance of roses.

"The director informed us that we'll be filming this part tomorrow."

Yin Lingzhu nodded, then realized the other person couldn't see her movement, so she spoke aloud: "Okay."

Yin Lingzhu noticed that when she spoke, her throat felt a bit dry.

She glanced over—the water glass was on Yan Si's side.

If she wanted water, she would either have to reach across Yan Si or walk around the coffee table.

Yin Lingzhu chose the first option.

She straightened up from the sofa, her arm passing over the script to successfully reach the glass.

But before she could feel pleased, as she was pulling her arm back, it accidentally brushed against Yan Si's lips.

The delicate sensation made Yin Lingzhu freeze, and the water in the glass spilled out, soaking Yan Si's script.

Seeing this, Yin Lingzhu immediately put down the glass and pulled out several tissues, pressing them against the wet script.

Yin Lingzhu looked at Yan Si and found that Yan Si was watching her wiping motions.

This made Yin Lingzhu feel very embarrassed. She should have just walked around the coffee table instead of being afraid of the trouble.

As for asking Yan Si for help—that was something she had never considered.

The air conditioning in the room was very warm, so Yin Lingzhu was only wearing a short-sleeved shirt.

Yan Si had specifically put on makeup when she came over.

So that brief contact had left a bright red lipstick mark on Yin Lingzhu's arm.

But it wasn't complete—at the edge of the lip print, it had been pulled into a red streak.

It looked like a rose, but the flower's stem seemed to be watered with blood.

Yan Si stared at that spot, her gaze following Yin Lingzhu's movements.

After Yin Lingzhu had absorbed most of the water from the script with tissues, when she looked at Yan Si again, she found that Yan Si seemed to still be staring at her hand.

Was she checking if the script had dried?

She withdrew her hand. "I have a hair dryer here. Wait a moment, I should be able to dry it."

She thought Yan Si was worried about her script.

A brand new script that hadn't been flipped through much had been ruined by her.

Yin Lingzhu sighed and prepared to get the hair dryer.

Even if it dried, it probably wouldn't return to its original state.

She also noticed that Yan Si's script had annotated notes on it. If she gave her own script to Yan Si, would Yan Si want it?

Just as Yin Lingzhu was thinking this, she heard Yan Si speak.

"Lingzhu, your arm."

Following Yan Si's gaze, she lifted her arm and discovered that splash of red.

"The pattern on it looks nice."

Yan Si's words got stuck in her throat.

After discovering there was something on her arm, Yin Lingzhu immediately pulled out a tissue and frantically rubbed at it.

When she found it wasn't easily removed, she used more and more force, and that area gradually turned red.

Yin Lingzhu's disgust was very obvious.

Yan Si stood up and handed her a tissue.

Yin Lingzhu's wiping motion paused as she took the tissue from her hand.

"Thank you." Yin Lingzhu pinched it between her index and middle fingers. "I'll go get the hair dryer."

Yin Lingzhu went into the bathroom and found the hair dryer.

Just as she was about to bring it out to Yan Si, she casually glanced in the mirror and saw her own arm.

The bright red on it was really glaring.

Yin Lingzhu put down the hair dryer and let the water flow over her arm again and again.

Until there wasn't a trace of lipstick visible on her arm.

Only then was Yin Lingzhu satisfied, and she picked up the hair dryer and walked out of the bathroom.

Yan Si, who had been paying attention to the sounds, noticed the moment Yin Lingzhu appeared that her arm now had nothing on it at all.

Yan Si's expression immediately fell.

However, her surface demeanor remained very calm, as if nothing had happened.

Yin Lingzhu took Yan Si's script and carefully blow-dried it.

But no matter how careful Yin Lingzhu was, the traces of water damage remained.

She looked at Yan Si apologetically. "Use mine instead."

Yan Si's gaze was still fixed on Yin Lingzhu's arm. Hearing Yin Lingzhu say this, she shook her head.

"It's fine, this one is good." She walked to Yin Lingzhu's side and took the script from her hands.

"Let's look at the script first."

The two of them spent the entire evening discussing this wrinkled script.

Yin Lingzhu discovered that everything Yan Si explained to her was what they would need for tomorrow.

Even for the parts of tomorrow's scenes that she didn't understand, Yan Si could demonstrate them on the spot.

This evening, Yin Lingzhu benefited greatly.