

Chapter 47-2

The next day, when Yin Lingzhu arrived at the film crew, perhaps by fate, she spotted Yan Si among the crowd at first glance.

Yan Si was wearing a simple long-sleeved shirt on top and black pants on the bottom.

She had on a black belt, but the buckle was gold, and on the right side of the belt was a design similar to suspenders, adding a few touches of playful charm.

The belt also had a gold chain hanging from it that, due to gravity, draped against her thigh.

Yan Si's outfit today made Yin Lingzhu feel that Yan Si seemed somewhat different from before.

And Yan Si seemed to notice someone looking at her, casting her gaze toward Yin Lingzhu.

Yin Lingzhu couldn't dodge in time and their eyes met.

After a brief exchange of glances, Yin Lingzhu was the first to look away.

Yin Lingzhu walked over to the director's side. At that moment, the director was holding a large megaphone and directing energetically.

In front of the director was the scene set up by the props team.

This scene was about the princess being trapped when someone set fire to the inn where she was staying, and the arsonist had also bribed the innkeeper to lock the princess's door from the outside.

The scholar happened to pass by and saw smoke coming from the guest room window. Remembering that it was the princess's room, she wanted to warn her.

The scholar entered the inn and saw that the princess's door had been locked from the outside.

She immediately realized the seriousness of the situation and used her own body to break down the door to rescue the princess.

The props team was setting up the scene for this sequence. The guest room, in pursuit of realism, was built to be completely authentic.

Looking at the guest room before her, Yin Lingzhu silently marveled at how realistic it was.

The director also noticed Yin Lingzhu standing beside him, and his smile was unstoppable.

"Little Yin, what do you think of the set?"

Yin Lingzhu thought the director wanted to get the actors' opinions, so she spoke honestly.

"Very good, very realistic. Is this wood all real?"

Hearing Yin Lingzhu's question, the director smiled even more. "Yes, our production has ample funding."

"This is all thanks to—" The director looked at Yin Lingzhu and stopped himself just in time.

"This is all thanks to Yan Si."

The director secretly glanced at Yin Lingzhu and, finding that she hadn't noticed anything, breathed a sigh of relief.

Good thing he didn't say it, otherwise he would have offended both financial backers.

Yin Lingzhu indeed hadn't noticed anything—she was still amazed by the precision of the construction before her.

"Director, if this room is really locked from the outside, the person inside can't get out?"

The director nodded. "Don't worry, I guarantee one hundred percent accuracy to the script—they can't get out."

Yin Lingzhu frowned as she looked at the room before her.

"What if—"

Before she could finish her words, the director already knew what she wanted to say.

"Little Yin, don't worry. This scene is absolutely safe."

The director pointed to another location. "Look, the water hose is right there. If anything goes wrong, we can put out the fire immediately."

Yin Lingzhu saw that spot and felt slightly more at ease.

Looking at the unusually realistic guest room before her, Yin Lingzhu marveled once again.

It was practically like they had ripped it straight out of a real inn.

With the director's call of "Action!" the actors, now changed into costume, entered their roles.

At the guest room door, the innkeeper locked the room's door.

After repeatedly confirming it was locked, the innkeeper crouched down and threw a torch through the door crack.

The princess had been drugged in her food and was now unconscious at the table.

Smoke gradually filled the room, and the princess, choked by the smoke, coughed a few times and woke up.

Seeing the situation she faced, the princess immediately called for help, but everyone had already been sent away.

No one could hear the princess's voice.

At this moment, the scholar appeared.

Yin Lingzhu forcefully rammed the door, but what should have happened didn't occur.

Yin Lingzhu repeatedly threw herself against the door, but it didn't budge at all, standing firmly in place.

At the door, Yin Lingzhu could already hear Yan Si's coughing, and the sound was getting louder.

"Yan Si, crouch down first."

The director also saw that something was wrong with the props and immediately directed the crew to put out the fire.

But the water hose malfunctioned at this critical moment—no water came out.

The director immediately ordered everyone to kick down the door.

The smoke inside grew thicker, and Yan Si was choked so badly she couldn't open her eyes.

Hearing what Yin Lingzhu said, Yan Si crouched down.

She could hear the urgency in Yin Lingzhu's voice and smiled slightly.

With a tremendous crash, the door was finally broken down by Yin Lingzhu.

Yin Lingzhu immediately saw Yan Si collapsed on the ground. She scooped Yan Si up in her arms and carried her out of the guest room.

Yan Si's consciousness cleared a little. She couldn't open her eyes, but she could smell the pear scent from Yin Lingzhu's body.

Her arms encircled Yin Lingzhu's neck, and her head rested safely against Yin Lingzhu's chest.

"How wonderful—you would save me."