

Chapter 48-1

The director hurriedly sent Yan Si to the hospital.

Yin Lingzhu followed along. She glanced at Yan Si lying on the bed, then turned and left.

After all, there was an assistant here, so Yan Si wouldn't have any problems.

Yin Lingzhu walked through the hospital. Her first meeting with Yan Si had been here.

Except at that time, she was the one lying on the hospital bed.

Yin Lingzhu's fingers touched the hospital wall. The cold sensation made her mind clear up a bit.

She and Yan Si would completely end things after this scene was finished filming.

At this moment, Yin Lingzhu was even wondering why she had accepted this role in the first place.

She had clearly understood at the time that this was something Yan Si had given her.

Yin Lingzhu sat on a chair in the corridor. The doctor said that Yan Si had fainted because she was choked by smoke, causing oxygen deprivation and temporary unconsciousness.

She would be fine after resting for a few days.

Yin Lingzhu was thinking about Yan Si's physical condition in her mind when she noticed someone sit down beside her.

She turned her head and saw it was the director.

The director currently had a dejected expression, with "worry" written clearly in his eyes.

Yin Lingzhu spoke up to comfort him, "Director, the doctor already said that Yan Si has good physical condition and won't have any major problems."

The director's slightly weathered voice spoke up, "Little Yin, if something had happened to Si Si¹, her fans definitely wouldn't let me off."

The director's tone was very heavy and fearful, making Yin Lingzhu somewhat puzzled.

Yan Si was often injured because of her serious attitude toward filming—she never used stunt doubles in any situation, so getting hurt was a common occurrence.

Her fans were already used to it. The director's attitude as if facing a great enemy was really incomprehensible to Yin Lingzhu.

The director sighed, "It's all my fault, all because of me."

Thinking of something, the bump between the director's eyebrows became more and more prominent.

"Originally, she wouldn't have been injured in this scene. It's all my fault."

Yin Lingzhu heard the regret in the director's voice, and she also sighed.

"Director, don't be too upset. This matter hasn't spread out yet, right?"

"Nothing will happen."

The director didn't know if he heard her or not, his gaze fixed intently on the hospital room door.

Seeing this, Yin Lingzhu couldn't say anything else.

The hospital corridor was very quiet now. The sound of running footsteps was very obvious due to the friction.

Yin Lingzhu instinctively looked over and saw it was the assistant director. As soon as he arrived, he asked the director whether Yan Si had woken up yet.

Yin Lingzhu saw the assistant director looking so anxious, with sweat even appearing on his forehead.

When she handed the assistant director tissues, she said, "She hasn't woken up yet."

The assistant director was obviously anxious. He didn't even have time to wipe the sweat on his face. "Director, the video and photos of Yan Si getting injured have spread online."

The director took out his phone. The video was posted by a marketing account.

【Shocking! Yan Si injured on set, the situation is actually like this】

Yin Lingzhu could see that the director's hand was trembling as he clicked on the screen.

In the video, the wooden guest room built by the props team was emitting thick smoke, and the fire extinguishing equipment prepared by the director had also malfunctioned.

At the end of the video, Yin Lingzhu kicked open the door and carried the unconscious Yan Si out.

Yan Si's unconscious state could be clearly seen.

The director's face turned pale, and he immediately returned to the crew to discuss countermeasures.

Yin Lingzhu found that video on her phone. Only now did she understand why the director was so nervous.

First floor comment: This is Si Si's last drama, and this is how the director handles it?

Second floor comment: This is the crew's problem, right? You can see in the video that the equipment malfunctioned.

Third floor comment: Of course, it's so obvious. It's clearly because the director didn't check properly.

A long string of attacking comments were directed at the director.

Yin Lingzhu looked at the first floor's "last drama" and finally understood why the director was so nervous.

Yin Lingzhu then went to Yan Si's Weibo, where the latest post was exactly Yan Si's retirement announcement.

It clearly stated that after finishing the drama currently in her hands, Yan Si would no longer act.

Yan Si wouldn't be acting anymore.

This thought appeared in Yin Lingzhu's mind, and she suddenly felt a sense of unreality.

Why was Yan Si retiring?

Yin Lingzhu lowered her hand, her eyes vacantly staring at the hospital room door.

Suddenly the door opened from inside—it was Yan Si's assistant.

The assistant walked step by step toward Yin Lingzhu, and Yin Lingzhu's gaze also fell on her.

"Miss Yin, President Yan² would like to see you."

The assistant bowed respectfully. Her attitude made Yin Lingzhu feel a bit surprised.

But she still nodded and walked into the room.

Footnotes:

¹ Si Si (思思): An affectionate nickname for Yan Si. In Chinese culture, repeating a character or syllable from someone's name is a common way to create an intimate nickname.

² President Yan (宴總): As established in the synopsis, this is the respectful title used by some characters to address Yan Si, reflecting her high status and wealth in the entertainment industry.
