

Chapter 57-2

Outside, Yan Si hadn't been waiting for Yin Lingzhu to come out, so she got up and came to the kitchen.

Discovering that Yin Lingzhu was already preparing to cook, she felt somewhat puzzled.

"It's only past ten o'clock now. There's no rush."

Yan Si said this while wanting to help Yin Lingzhu with cooking.

Yin Lingzhu shook the water off her hands and pushed Yan Si out.

"Wait outside. Watch your health."

Yan Si couldn't even get a word out before being pushed out of the kitchen by Yin Lingzhu.

She smiled helplessly and could only listen to Yin Lingzhu, sitting on the sofa and taking care of her health.

But Yan Si still occasionally glanced toward the kitchen door, feeling somewhat panicked inside.

Yin Lingzhu let out a breath inside the room.

Her mood was terrible today, and she had no heart to think carefully about what to eat for lunch, so she had just bought some things randomly.

Yin Lingzhu looked at the ribs and corn she had bought, already having an idea in mind.

Yin Lingzhu came out of the kitchen—the soup was already simmering.

Yan Si had been watching her, and seeing her come out, immediately made room on the sofa.

"Sit here."

Yan Si patted the spot beside her.

Yin Lingzhu shook her head and pointed to her room.

"I'm a bit tired. I'll go rest first."

Yan Si watched her actions, the uneasy feeling in her heart growing stronger.

But seeing Yin Lingzhu's condition, she couldn't say much.

She could only sit anxiously on the sofa, waiting for Yin Lingzhu to come out.

After Yin Lingzhu returned to her room, she played that recording over and over many times.

She didn't know why she was being so persistent about it.

The voices of Yan Si and You Xiaoxiao came through the speaker, and after playing it so many times, Yin Lingzhu could already recite the conversation from memory.

It wasn't until her phone's notification sound snapped her back to reality.

Looking at the time, she opened the bedroom door.

Yan Si, who had finally waited for Yin Lingzhu to come out, hurriedly walked to her side.

But she didn't know what to say, so she just followed behind Yin Lingzhu. Wherever Yin Lingzhu went, she followed.

Yin Lingzhu couldn't stand it anymore. She looked at Yan Si behind her, her tone helpless, "What are you doing?"

Yan Si stopped in her tracks. She wanted to ask if Yin Lingzhu had encountered anyone when she went out.

But she also knew she couldn't ask Yin Lingzhu directly like that.

Yan Si also noticed that Yin Lingzhu was about to enter the kitchen, so she quickly said, "Seeing you busy while I'm just sitting there idle makes me feel guilty."

Noticing that Yin Lingzhu kept looking at her, Yan Si felt a bit guilty.

"Alright then."

Yin Lingzhu slowly opened the kitchen door.

There wasn't much worth noting in the kitchen—just a soup that was simmering.

Yan Si curiously walked over. The clay pot was sitting on the stove.

"You can cut some vegetables." Yin Lingzhu walked past Yan Si and pointed to the greens on the cutting board.

Yan Si glanced at the clay pot and slowly sat down in front of the cutting board, following Yin Lingzhu's instructions.

When she picked up the kitchen knife, she asked puzzledly, "Are we having soup for lunch?"

Yin Lingzhu was adding seasonings to the clay pot. Hearing what Yan Si said, she told the truth, "Yes, the supermarket had a discount, so I bought some things randomly. It seemed good for making soup."

The vegetables on the cutting board were finished, and Yin Lingzhu's soup was simmering again.

"Let's go."

Yin Lingzhu said flatly.

Yan Si made an "oh" sound and followed behind Yin Lingzhu.

Just as she was lost in thought, she suddenly heard Yin Lingzhu's voice.

"Can I take a look at the medicine you're taking?"

Yin Lingzhu's words stirred up waves in Yan Si's heart.

She controlled her expression and asked, "Of course. Did something happen?"

Yin Lingzhu shook her head, "No, I'm just curious, and I want to supervise you taking your medicine in the future."

Yin Lingzhu's tone was also very normal, and her expression showed no changes.

Along the way, except for the sound of shoe soles hitting the ground, there was no other sound, bringing an especially quiet feeling.

"A storm is brewing."¹

Yan Si inexplicably thought of this phrase as she turned the bedroom door handle.

At this moment, she could only be grateful that she had opened the medicine packages, otherwise she would definitely be exposed.

She walked straight to the desk, opened the drawer, and the medicines were neatly arranged inside.

Yan Si placed all the medicines on the desk surface.

Yin Lingzhu walked over and looked carefully, silently memorizing the names of the medicines in her heart.

Looking at such a serious Yin Lingzhu, Yan Si's heart felt like it was about to jump out of her throat.

At this moment, she could hear her own heartbeat.

Yin Lingzhu memorized the medicine names, and when she looked up, she saw Yan Si's nervous appearance.

She pretended not to notice anything, "Just take your medicine on time."

When she left Yan Si's bedroom, she immediately recorded the medicine names on her phone.

Back in her own bedroom, following the medicine names she had just recorded on her phone, she began searching.

But the results were beyond her expectations.

These medicines really were for treating pancreatic cancer.

Seeing this answer, Yin Lingzhu couldn't describe how she felt.

She leaned back in her chair and let out a sigh of relief.

Perhaps because her nerves had been too tense and suddenly relaxed, Yin Lingzhu actually fell asleep.

When she woke up again, it was because of knocking on the door.

She opened the door to find Yan Si wearing an apron, calling her to eat.

Only then did Yin Lingzhu realize she had slept until twelve o'clock.

When Yin Lingzhu came out, Yan Si had already finished cooking everything and set it on the table.

She rubbed her palms, feeling a bit embarrassed.

In the center of the dining table was a corn and rib soup.

After Yin Lingzhu sat down, Yan Si served her a bowl and placed it in front of her.

Yin Lingzhu looked at the soup in her bowl, set the bowl aside, and started eating the dishes.

"Not drinking it?"

Hearing Yan Si ask her, Yin Lingzhu glanced at her, "I'll drink it last."

At the dining table, there was only the sound of chopsticks clinking against plates. Neither of them spoke.

After finishing eating, when Yan Si was about to clear the table, Yin Lingzhu blocked Yan Si's hand.

Seeing Yan Si's puzzled look, Yin Lingzhu slowly spoke.

"Don't clean up yet. I want to show you something." Yin Lingzhu's voice was low, speaking word by word.

Yan Si already had a bad premonition in her heart.

"Let me wash the dishes first, okay?"

Yin Lingzhu let go of Yan Si's wrist and shook her head.

In front of Yan Si, she opened Ming Qingyun's WeChat and played the recording she had sent.

Footnotes:

¹ "A storm is brewing" (山雨欲來風滿樓) - A Chinese idiom meaning that trouble or conflict is approaching, literally "mountain rain is coming, wind fills the building." It suggests an atmosphere of tension before a major confrontation.

² This chapter shows the final buildup to the confrontation between Yan Si and Yin Lingzhu. Despite Yin Lingzhu's brief relief when she confirms the medicines are real cancer treatments, she ultimately decides to confront Yan Si with the audio evidence Ming Qingyun provided.

³ The chapter effectively builds tension through Yan Si's growing awareness that something is wrong, while Yin Lingzhu struggles with her emotions and ultimately decides to reveal the truth she has learned.