

Chapter 61-2

Yin Lingzhu looked at her, her eyes above the mask carrying an air of indifference.

Her hands were also tucked into her clothing pockets due to the strong wind.

At this moment, she seemed as if she could withdraw and leave at any time.

Yan Si steadied her heart again and again before finally speaking out her original thoughts.

"I don't know either."

Yin Lingzhu's eyes showed obvious disbelief.

"Since you don't want to say, then let's leave it at that."

She said this and turned to leave.

Seeing this, Yan Si immediately spoke up to stop her, "What I said is true."

Her speech was very fast, and even when Yin Lingzhu lifted her leg to step away, she ran to Yin Lingzhu's side.

"At that time, I thought that only if I was sick would you pay attention to me, so I came up with this method."

She spread both hands open, blocking Yin Lingzhu's path forward.

Yin Lingzhu looked at her but didn't stop her own footsteps. She reached out her hand, wanting to knock down Yan Si's arms.

But just as she was about to make contact, Yin Lingzhu saw Yan Si's hand again.

The place where it had been pinched by the door had already turned purple and blue.

Yan Si had been able to debut for so many years, so naturally all aspects of her condition were quite good.

Now on her fair skin, there was suddenly an additional patch of dark blue color that looked very striking.

Yin Lingzhu frowned and put her hand back in her pocket.

"Say what you want to say, quickly." Yin Lingzhu glanced at the sky and urged.

Yan Si was wearing a brown coat today, which could effectively block out part of the cold brought by the wind.

But seeing Yin Lingzhu's impatience, she felt that her heart was much colder at this moment.

She suppressed the bitterness in her heart and spoke out her original plan.

"Initially I only wanted to pretend to have a minor illness, but I felt that if it wasn't serious enough, once I recovered, you would want to leave."

Yan Si threw caution to the wind and said everything in one breath.

Yin Lingzhu clenched her hands tightly, "So you pretended to have cancer?"

Yan Si nodded, "Yes, that's right, but I regret it now."

Yin Lingzhu no longer wanted to say anything.

She prepared to go around Yan Si's arms and leave.

But Yan Si pursued relentlessly, following beside Yin Lingzhu.

Yin Lingzhu discovered the person clinging to her side and became irritated.

"If you're really that bored, go do some good deeds. Don't come pestering me."

Yin Lingzhu glanced at her with impatience.

Seeing Yan Si's mouth about to open and her pace not slowing down, Yin Lingzhu's forehead throbbed.

She knew that Yan Si hadn't listened to what she said.

"Yan Corporation does charity work every year, and I also personally fund people in impoverished areas every year."

Yan Si answered diligently and earnestly.

Yin Lingzhu pressed her lips together, thinking of what happened this morning, "You also saw this morning that I already have someone outside."

"Why are you still following me?"

She looked at Yan Si coldly, her mouth showing undisguised disgust.

Hearing her words, Yan Si's heart clenched.

"You won't be together with Ming Qingyun." Yan Si lowered her head and said.

Yin Lingzhu raised her eyebrows. What Yan Si said was the truth, but after hearing this, she wasn't very happy.

It was as if Yan Si understood her so well.

She looked at the bus station not far away and stopped her steps.

"Then you guessed wrong. She and I are together right now."

Yin Lingzhu pointed at the sky, where large patches of dark clouds had already pressed down.

"It's going to rain."

After Yin Lingzhu finished speaking, she thought Yan Si should understand her meaning and wouldn't follow her anymore.

She saw there was a bus coming in the distance.

Yin Lingzhu queued up at the bus stop to get on, her brow furrowed tightly.

Things weren't going as she had thought.

Yan Si was behind her, and it looked like she was planning to take the bus too.

She turned her body sideways and glanced at Yan Si.

There were quite a few people waiting for this bus, and Yan Si had now put on a mask as well.

Noticing Yin Lingzhu looking at her, she showed Yin Lingzhu a smile.

But with her face now covered, her facial expressions couldn't be fully displayed.

Yin Lingzhu saw her eyes curve slightly and didn't want to care about anything anymore.

If Yan Si wanted to take the bus, then let her take it. What did it have to do with her?

Yin Lingzhu thought this way, but after she found a seat and sat down, she discovered that Yan Si was still standing by the coin box.

She watched for a while and discovered that Yan Si actually wanted to put a hundred-yuan bill into the coin box.

Yin Lingzhu stood up, wanting to stop Yan Si's hand holding the money.

But when she wanted to walk over, she suddenly froze.

Yan Si's affairs—however she wanted to handle them was however she wanted to handle them. What did it have to do with her?

Thinking this, she sat back down in her original seat.

After Yan Si put that hundred-yuan bill in, she walked straight to the seat next to Yin Lingzhu.
