

Chapter 62-1

Yan Si sat in the seat beside Yin Lingzhu.

Yin Lingzhu didn't want to pay attention to her and lowered her head to casually look at her phone.

But actually on the bus, Yin Lingzhu couldn't focus on anything and just kept switching between several apps.

She saw in her peripheral vision that Yan Si seemed to be constantly staring at her.

Yin Lingzhu swallowed and lowered her head to look at her phone again.

Just as she opened an entertainment app, she suddenly heard a commotion nearby.

Originally she didn't want to get involved, planning to just get off at her stop without causing trouble.

But as she heard the sounds getting closer to her, Yin Lingzhu looked up to see what was happening.

Only then did she discover that people around seemed to have recognized Yan Si's identity.

Several people were walking toward Yan Si.

Those few people had some uncertainty on their faces, but their footsteps showed no hesitation.

Yin Lingzhu squeezed her phone, the cold touch helping to clear her mind considerably.

Yan Si sat in the outer seat, while Yin Lingzhu sat in the inner window seat.

Seeing several men already approaching them, Yin Lingzhu frowned.

Just as she was thinking, the several men had already reached their side.

"Beauty, how about taking off that mask so we can see?"

One person leading the group said with a smile, and the other few chimed in agreement.

Yin Lingzhu glanced at them without speaking.

Yan Si directly ignored them.

The person who had spoken earlier saw this and coughed heavily, trying to salvage his dignity.

He puffed out his chest, his dyed yellow mohawk¹ bobbing up and down.

"Little sister is still shy, so big brother will help you take it off personally." As he spoke, his hand with dirt under the fingernails reached out.

There were more than ten people on the bus, but facing this obvious harassment scene, not a single person spoke up.

Seeing that hand about to touch Yan Si's face, and noticing Yan Si showed no sign of movement, Yin Lingzhu stood up and knocked that hand away.

The mohawk guy whose hand was knocked away looked at her in shock.

Feeling the dull pain in his hand, the mohawk guy shouted loudly, "Do you know who I am?"

Yin Lingzhu walked from her seat to the aisle, shielding Yan Si behind her.

"I don't care who you are. Leave, or I'm calling the police."

She looked coldly at the thugs in front of her.

The mohawk guy acted as if he heard something funny and burst into laughter.

"Do you know who my big brother is?"

Yin Lingzhu didn't want to deal with him. She had Yan Si sit in the window seat while she stood in the outer position.

Seeing her movements, the mohawk guy said, "You look down on me?"

Yin Lingzhu just looked at him, her mouth curving into a cold smile, her disdain clearly evident.

The mohawk guy raised his head at this moment, "I'm telling you, my brother works at the station². Calling the police won't help."

Yin Lingzhu didn't want to get entangled with this kind of thug, but the mohawk guy didn't want to let her go.

Seeing Yin Lingzhu ignore him, the mohawk guy immediately kicked the seat behind Yin Lingzhu.

"Hey, did you hear me?"

At this point, Yin Lingzhu couldn't ignore him anymore.

"Looking for trouble?" She stepped forward, crossing her arms and raising an eyebrow.

Hearing what Yin Lingzhu said, the mohawk guy couldn't help but step back, but he still tried to maintain face.

"Move aside now and I can let you go." The mohawk guy stepped forward.

But Yin Lingzhu didn't move, secretly gripping her phone in her hand.

Two people followed behind the mohawk guy, both cowering timidly.

The air fell silent in that moment.

The mohawk guy swallowed and lunged forward.

Yin Lingzhu seized the opportunity and kicked precisely at the mohawk guy's stomach.

At the same time, she noticed the two lackeys behind the mohawk guy also wanted to make a move.

Yin Lingzhu threw the phone she was gripping in her hand.

Her phone had a lanyard attached, and she held one end of the strap, swinging the phone in a circle around herself as the center.

It precisely hit both men on their heads.

A phone wasn't exactly a powerful weapon, but its impact was not to be underestimated.

Yin Lingzhu looked down to see the two men crouching and holding their heads.

She also glanced at the mohawk guy, who was now clutching his stomach and lying on the ground.

But even with this happening, not a single person wanted to intervene. Everyone on the bus coldly watched everything unfold.

Yin Lingzhu opened her phone and dialed the police.

After explaining what had just happened over the phone, Yin Lingzhu hung up.

She sat back in her seat, keeping an eye on the mohawk guy and the other two men.

The police arrived quickly, taking only a few minutes.

The three men were taken away, while Yin Lingzhu and Yan Si were also asked to come along.

After the police recorded their statements, they were released.

Yin Lingzhu came out of the police station and looked up at the sky.

Raindrops the size of soybeans were hitting the ground, splashing up quite large water sprays.

Yin Lingzhu sighed and looked around, fortunately discovering a bus stop nearby.

Yin Lingzhu put her hand over her head and ran through the rain.

When she stood under the bus stop sign, with the rain blocked by the canopy, she finally had her hands free to pat the rainwater off her body.

But as she casually looked around waiting for the bus, she saw Yan Si also holding her hand over her head, running through the rain toward this direction.

Footnotes:

¹ Mohawk: A hairstyle where the hair is styled to stand up in the center of the head, often associated with punk culture. In Chinese, "飛機頭" literally means "airplane head" due to its resemblance to the shape of an aircraft.

² Station: Referring to a police station, implying that his brother works in law enforcement.

