

Chapter 62-2

When Yan Si arrived and stood steady in front of the bus stop sign, she also patted the rainwater off her body just like Yin Lingzhu had done moments before.

Watching this, Yin Lingzhu suddenly felt a surge of inexplicable anger.

"Are you satisfied now?" Yin Lingzhu looked at the rain in front of her, her voice showing no fluctuation, seeming no different from usual.

But Yan Si could hear that Yin Lingzhu was on the edge of an explosion.

Yan Si's heart was beating somewhat fast.

She licked her lips and took a deep breath before daring to speak.

"I just wanted to get closer to you. I didn't expect it would turn out like this."

Listening to her explanation, Yin Lingzhu's gaze fell on the water splashes on the ground.

The light from the night street lamps was absorbed into the water, and when it hit the ground heavily, the light also shattered in that moment.

Yin Lingzhu's eyes reflected this scene as she clenched her hands.

"Can you stop causing me trouble?"

As Yin Lingzhu spoke, the fabric was gripped tightly in her hands.

Yan Si hadn't expected Yin Lingzhu to say such words, and she froze there.

Her lips trembled, her throat felt as if it were tightly locked, dry and somewhat painful.

"Am I... am I bothering you?"

Yin Lingzhu didn't look at her, "Yes."

Even though the sounds of car horns and raindrops around them were so loud and prominent, in this moment, Yan Si couldn't hear anything.

Her world seemed to become blank in this moment, her brain cycling through Yin Lingzhu's single word "yes."

When she came back to her senses, her mind was still not very clear, and the sourness and pain spreading from her heart buried her.

Yan Si opened her mouth, still having one thought in her mind.

"I—" Yan Si had only said one word when Yin Lingzhu seemed to know what she was going to say and cut her off in advance.

Yin Lingzhu met her gaze, cold light flickering in the depths of her eyes.

"You should respect me, not cling to me."

A bus came, and before getting on, she said one last thing to Yan Si.

"Don't use your love to bind me, to tie me down."

Yan Si's feet seemed to have grown roots, fixed in place.

Until the bus drove away, she stared blankly at the rear of the bus.

The rain in the sky was getting heavier, showing no signs of decreasing.

Yan Si hugged her arms as the heavy rain fell and cold air spread through the atmosphere, continuously eroding her body.

She crouched down, the hand that had been pinched by the door earlier was now aching dully.

Cars came and went by the roadside, but Yan Si didn't even look at them. Her mind kept thinking about what Yin Lingzhu had just said.

Several black luxury cars stopped in front of Yan Si.

Yan Si's assistant got out of the car, holding an umbrella in her hand.

She bent down and held the umbrella over Yan Si's head, "President Yan, it's time to go."

Yin Lingzhu sat in her seat, watching the scenery outside the window continuously receding, and her heart gradually calmed down.

The words she had just spoken were the words buried deepest in her heart.

But she also knew how hurtful those words were, which is why she had never said them before.

Raindrops hit the glass, drawing winding traces along the car window.

For the next month, she didn't see Yan Si at all.

Even when filming with the crew, Yin Lingzhu never saw Yan Si.

However, Yin Lingzhu didn't want to ask about it either.

But the frequency of her encounters with Ming Qingyun was increasing.

From initial impatience to current compromise, Yin Lingzhu looked toward Ming Qingyun standing in the center of the crew and sighed.

She had only recently learned that Ming Qingyun had also invested in this drama, which explained why the director was willing to cast her.

She didn't believe that Ming Qingyun hadn't put in effort behind this.

Ming Qingyun noticed Yin Lingzhu looking at her and showed her a big smile.

Yin Lingzhu also smiled back at her, but the moment she turned around, her face showed no expression whatsoever.

After constantly encountering Ming Qingyun, Yin Lingzhu knew that these artificial coincidences were something she couldn't avoid.

Even if she hid in her hotel room and didn't go out, Ming Qingyun could pry open the door.

"Congratulations on wrapping up!"

The director and the main cast of this drama raised their glasses together at the dinner table.

With the crisp sound of glass clinking, it also meant that this drama had come to an end.

Yin Lingzhu gently took a sip of wine and then put down the glass in her hand.

Yan Si sat in the main seat and also put down her wine glass.

She glanced at Yin Lingzhu, her hand gripping the wine glass continuously tightening.

The thoughts that kept arising in her heart were suppressed again and again, yet they kept resurfacing.

Just as Yan Si made up her mind for the last time and was about to raise her wine glass, someone acted before her.

Ming Qingyun picked up her wine glass, "Here's to our newcomer Lingzhu, may your future development get better and better."

Seeing that even the investor was saying this, the people at the dinner table naturally chimed in.

"Come on, everyone raise your glasses too."

Yan Si's wine glass hadn't even been raised before it was overshadowed by the bigger movements of others.

Seeing this scene, Yin Lingzhu had no choice but to refuse and could only pick up the glass in front of her, "Thank you, everyone."

After saying this, she tilted her head back and drank the entire glass in one gulp.
