

Chapter 63-1

Yan Si's hand gripping the wine glass turned white, and she silently finished her cup of wine as well.

But mingling among the crowd, her actions didn't attract anyone's attention.

With one cup of wine down, Yin Lingzhu's stomach felt like it was on fire, and her head became somewhat dizzy.

Seeing the others still wanting to pour her more wine, she quickly waved her hands, "Next time for sure, I've had enough today."

Yin Lingzhu's face was clearly flushed red, and her eyes seemed moist from drinking too much, her beautiful eyebrows furrowing slightly.

Seeing her like this, the others at the table also gave up the idea of forcing more drinks on her.

Yin Lingzhu picked up her chopsticks and carefully picked at the dishes in front of her.

But in reality, she couldn't taste anything at all—the large amount of alcohol had numbed her brain.

Yin Lingzhu mechanically put the food into her mouth.

Ming Qingyun had been carefully observing her, and noticing this situation, she put down the glass she'd been holding.

She stood up and slowly walked to Yin Lingzhu's side, gently patting Yin Lingzhu's shoulder.

Yin Lingzhu turned her head, and the world in her eyes had become distorted, Ming Qingyun included.

With her delayed reactions, she couldn't recognize who the person in front of her was.

"Hello."

Yin Lingzhu said foolishly.

Ming Qingyun held up two fingers in front of her, shaking them as she spoke, "How many is this?"

Yin Lingzhu seemed to see a ball moving in front of her eyes.

But she retained a bit of rational thought.

"This is a hand." Yin Lingzhu said happily.

Hearing her answer, Ming Qingyun found it amusing and withdrew her hand.

She slowly helped Yin Lingzhu up, while wondering to herself—she used to know that Yin Lingzhu had a very good tolerance for alcohol.

But today she had only drunk one cup and was this drunk, which didn't match her memory.

Thinking this, Ming Qingyun's eyes turned to look at Yin Lingzhu's remaining wine glass.

She supported Yin Lingzhu with one hand while picking up the wine glass with the other and placing it under her nose.

The sharp smell of baijiu¹ instantly rushed to her brain, making her cough several times.

Now she understood why Yin Lingzhu was so drunk.

This was drinking nearly half a bottle of baijiu in one gulp.

Thinking this, Ming Qingyun wanted to put Yin Lingzhu's arm over her shoulder.

But Yin Lingzhu wasn't willing, flailing her body wildly, making her very difficult to control.

Ming Qingyun was having some trouble controlling the situation.

Some people at the dinner table also noticed what was happening between the two.

But no one was willing to step forward now—everyone could see Ming Qingyun's special feelings for Yin Lingzhu.

But there was one exception.

Yan Si stood up from her seat and quickly came to the front of the two.

Yin Lingzhu couldn't read the atmosphere between the two now—the excessive alcohol made her completely unable to think, and she was also feeling physically uncomfortable.

Yan Si reached out a hand, wanting to take hold of Yin Lingzhu.

But Yin Lingzhu didn't obediently stand in place—she desperately tried to get out of Ming Qingyun's embrace.

Ming Qingyun didn't dare use too much force, afraid of hurting her, so she actually let Yin Lingzhu struggle free.

But Yin Lingzhu couldn't stand steadily either—the ground under her feet seemed to have turned into cotton in her eyes, soft and unstable.

She swayed as she tried to go outside.

But Yin Lingzhu couldn't see the path in front of her clearly at all.

Seeing this situation, Ming Qingyun hurriedly followed beside her, supporting Yin Lingzhu carefully.

Yan Si wasn't willing to fall behind either.

Ming Qingyun was on Yin Lingzhu's left side, so she positioned herself on Yin Lingzhu's right side.

The two were like Yin Lingzhu's guardians, ignoring the gazes of others as they escorted Yin Lingzhu outside.

The private room fell silent.

Everyone looked at each other, unable to say a word.

The only person with a normal expression was the director.

This drama originally couldn't be filmed due to funding issues.

But that day, suddenly both Yan Si and Ming Qingyun came to him one after another, expressing their willingness to be investors, but with conditions.

The director originally didn't agree, but the two offered too much money.

And their demands were the same—both wanted Yin Lingzhu to join the crew.

At the time, the director calculated that this was a deal worth making, so Yin Lingzhu joined the group as a complete newcomer.

As the director, he naturally had more awareness than others and could guess about 80-90% of what was going on.

The director looked at the people in the private room, their bewildered expressions successfully amusing him.

Someone heard the director's laughter and looked toward him.

Some quick-witted people immediately caught on.

"Director, did you know something in advance and keep it from us?"

A voice emerged from the crowd.

The director laughed and waved his hand, "How could that be? Drink, drink."

Seeing the director like this, what else was there not to understand?

But one person secretly clenched their fists.

Footnotes:

¹ Baijiu: A traditional Chinese distilled alcoholic beverage, typically very strong (40-60% alcohol by volume). It's known for its potent smell and high alcohol content.