

Chapter 82-1

Yan Si looked at the group of people standing in the room.

Were these really her employees? They were all this kind of people.

Yan Si's brow furrowed tightly.

She sat back down in her office chair, her gaze falling on Qin Luo.

Qin Luo had already finished his phone call. He turned around, the footprint still remaining on his chest.

He placed his phone on the office desk. "I've made the call. You just wait."

Qin Luo said gleefully.

His eyes were full of mockery. "When my dad gets here, you'll get what's coming to you."

Yan Si shook her head slightly, feeling sorry that the Qin family had such an heir.

She couldn't be bothered to deal with Qin Luo, so she opened the computer in front of her and went to watch Yin Lingzhu's livestream.

Seeing that he was being completely ignored, Qin Luo felt his anger flare up again.

But he also knew that he wouldn't get anything good out of this situation right now.

After hanging up the phone, Qin Ruri looked at Qin Qi in front of him.

"I still have business to attend to, so I'll leave first."

Qin Ruri's expression was serious, with a hint of urgency.

After hearing Qin Ruri's words, Qin Qi was stunned for a moment.

"Was that phone call from Qin Luo?"

After hearing Qin Qi's words, Qin Ruri glared at him with displeasure.

His finger almost poked Qin Qi's face. "Xiao Luo¹, what do you mean calling him Qin Luo? That's your younger brother."

Qin Qi looked at Qin Ruri, then at the fingertip so close to his face, and slowly closed his eyes.

"Fine, was it from Xiao Luo?"

Qin Qi's voice was low, carrying an imperceptible sense of desolation.

Qin Ruri grunted in response. "It seems someone is giving Xiao Luo trouble."

He snorted coldly, not caring what expression Qin Qi had, and hurried outside.

Qin Qi didn't even try to stop him. He stood straight in place, watching Qin Ruri's back as he left without any reluctance.

After a while, he picked up a cup from the table and smashed it hard onto the ground.

When the Qin family's butler heard the sound, he knew something bad had happened.

He hurriedly came to Qin Qi's side, and seeing the fragments on the ground, he quickly had someone quietly clean them up.

"Young Master, the family head is just that kind of person. When he can't see the second young master, his temper is always bad."

Qin Qi listened to the butler calling him "second young master" and revealed a bitter smile.

"Second young master? Today is my birthday, and just because of one phone call from Qin Luo, father left."

Qin Qi's eyes harbored hatred, and he swept the cake to the floor.

The white cream fell on the expensive black long-haired carpet, particularly jarring.

Qin Ruri arrived at the filming building.

Before getting out of the car, he straightened his clothes.

The assistant director, following Yan Si's instructions, was waiting punctually in the parking garage.

He led Qin Ruri all the way up to the office where Yan Si was located.

"President Qin, we're here."

The assistant director respectfully extended one hand, bowed, and gestured for Qin Ruri to enter.

Qin Ruri looked at what seemed like a very ordinary office, his disdain barely concealed.

On the phone, Qin Luo's voice sounded as if he had suffered some great injustice, and he hadn't asked many questions.

Originally, he was worried that Qin Luo might have provoked someone formidable.

But now it seemed his worries were unnecessary.

Qin Ruri raised his chin. "Go open the door."

His expression was arrogant as he spoke imperiously.

Footnotes:

¹ Xiao Luo (小洛) - "Xiao" is an affectionate diminutive prefix commonly used before names in Chinese families, similar to adding "-ie" or "little" in English. Qin Ruri insists that Qin Qi use this intimate form to address his half-brother, emphasizing the family hierarchy and his favoritism toward Qin Luo.
