

Chapter 84-1

Yin Lingzhu's face was pale. Before Wan Miaoyin had a chance to say anything, Yin Lingzhu was already taken away by the medical staff.

Wan Miaoyin followed behind the doctor.

It wasn't until Yin Lingzhu was pushed into the medical room that Wan Miaoyin finally let go.

Wan Miaoyin felt extremely regretful in her heart. If it weren't for her, Yin Lingzhu wouldn't have ended up in the hospital.

But no matter how much she regretted it in her heart, this incident had already happened.

After Yan Si paid the fees, she looked around in circles before finally spotting Wan Miaoyin.

"How is the situation? Is there any danger?" Yan Si asked anxiously.

Wan Miaoyin pointed toward the operating room door. "Lingzhu is inside having surgery."

"I don't know the specific situation either."

Yan Si stood anxiously at the door.

But she didn't say much more and could only wait for news from inside.

Yan Si sat down next to Wan Miaoyin. "That Wang Qingran¹ is your person, right?"

Wan Miaoyin's gaze remained fixed on the operating room door, not giving Yan Si a single glance.

But Yan Si wasn't annoyed either. Like Wan Miaoyin, she also stared at the operating room door.

This incident was actually related to her as well. If this production team's medical work had been done properly, perhaps Yin Lingzhu's injuries wouldn't have been this severe.

Yan Si's brows were tightly knitted together, and her heart was filled with anxiety.

The hospital corridor was very quiet, making footsteps particularly clear.

Yan Si frowned in displeasure and looked toward the approaching person.

Ming Qingyun's face showed no expression as she calmly sat down on another bench in the corridor.

Yan Si only glanced at her once before returning her attention to the operating room door.

Ming Qingyun didn't want to pay attention to her either. The fact that she could come here meant she knew what had happened.

She glanced at Wan Miaoyin sitting next to Yan Si, and a flash of gloom passed through her eyes.

Ming Qingyun had just finished a meeting when she received news of Yin Lingzhu's injury.

She immediately rushed to the hospital, but even so, she hadn't seen Yin Lingzhu at all.

Thinking of this, Ming Qingyun looked at Wan Miaoyin again.

Wan Miaoyin also sensed the gaze from the newcomer directed at her, but she didn't want to acknowledge it.

Right now, her heart only cared about one thing: when would Yin Lingzhu be able to come out.

The air suddenly became quiet, as if even the sound of breathing could be heard.

Under their expectant gazes, the doctor pushed open the door.

As soon as the door opened, he saw three pairs of expectant eyes.

Having worked in operating rooms for so many years, the doctor had seen many such scenes.

He showed a reassuring smile. "Don't worry, the patient's surgery was very successful."

In the hospital room, Yin Lingzhu lay on the bed. Due to the anesthesia, she was still in an unconscious state.

Yan Si, Wan Miaoyin, and Ming Qingyun surrounded the bedside.

After confirming that Yin Lingzhu's body was fine, they stared at each other.

A nurse came into the room to hang an IV drip. Seeing the tense atmosphere inside, the nurse unhappily reminded them:

"The patient needs a quiet environment. Please don't disturb her."

After the nurse left, Yan Si sat down in the bedside care chair.

There was only one care chair provided for each bed.

Seeing Yan Si's inconsiderate action, Ming Qingyun opened her mouth.

Remembering the nurse's reminder, she could only swallow the words she wanted to say.

So she could only move a chair from elsewhere in the room and sit beside Yin Lingzhu's bed.

Wan Miaoyin saw their actions but didn't choose to stay by the bedside.

"Take good care of her."

After saying this, Wan Miaoyin walked out of the room, gently closing the door behind her.

She casually hailed a taxi and came to the filming building.

After paying the taxi driver and getting out of the car, Wan Miaoyin immediately spotted Wang Qingran.

And beside Wang Qingran, the cameraman was still recording.

Wan Miaoyin's originally anxious mood was like a lit fuse that suddenly exploded.

"Enough! Stop filming!"

Wan Miaoyin suddenly shouted, and the cameraman's hand shook.

But the cameraman didn't comply. The director's heart was unsettled.

This program, although the director's name was on it, he actually wasn't really in charge.

He was just using the director's title to make more money.

[This is the first time I've seen Miaomiao angry.]

[Me too. I always thought Miaomiao never got angry.]

[Sigh, I wonder how Zhuzhu² is doing.]

[It shouldn't be too serious, otherwise Miaomiao wouldn't have come back.]

[Heh, I feel like they're just putting on a show.]

[Zhuzhu fell like that, and it's a show?]

[If it's not a show, there must be a script or something. It's all acting, just to fool you people.]

[This live stream is almost 24 hours, where would they have time to read scripts?]

The chat comments started arguing again.

Usually at times like this, the director would be very happy.

The more people posted comments, the more money he could make.

But today, his heart was beating very fast, as if he sensed something bad was about to happen.

But he also knew that this program could have this level of popularity entirely due to the benefits brought by 24-hour live streaming.

It was impossible to suddenly stop the live stream.

Footnotes:

¹ Wang Qingran: A character's name, appearing to be Wan Miaoyin's subordinate or associate.

² Zhuzhu: A nickname for Yin Lingzhu. In Chinese, "竹" (zhu) means bamboo, and doubling it creates an affectionate nickname.