

Chapter 85-2

Yin Lingzhu shook her head, then nodded again.

Wan Miaoyin watched her actions, not understanding what she meant.

"This program isn't like the ones I participated in before—no singing, no dancing. What could I prepare for?"

Yin Lingzhu said frankly, "Though I did research previous episodes of the program, so I guess I did some preparation."

Wan Miaoyin hadn't expected that Yin Lingzhu would really be this naive.

Yin Lingzhu also noticed that the way Wan Miaoyin looked at her had changed.

"I felt this program wasn't that complicated, so I didn't prepare much."

Yin Lingzhu said somewhat sheepishly.

Wan Miaoyin looked at her. "What you thought actually wasn't wrong."

Yin Lingzhu's eyes suddenly lit up.

If it was a live stream, then didn't Wan Miaoyin have to go back?

Thinking this, Yin Lingzhu became excited.

"Miaoyin, then you should go back to the live stream now. You don't need to take care of me."

Yin Lingzhu suddenly felt this reason wasn't quite sufficient, so she added:

"You want to be a singer—this is a great opportunity."

After hearing Yin Lingzhu's words, Wan Miaoyin shook her head slightly.

"The live stream is now closed. The production team has suspended filming."

Wan Miaoyin took out her phone and opened the program's official Weibo.

The latest post was from a few hours ago.

"Due to a guest being injured during the program, filming has been suspended."

Looking at the words on the screen, Yin Lingzhu felt that her last hope was also gone.

Wan Miaoyin had been watching Yin Lingzhu the whole time. Seeing Yin Lingzhu's expression of utter despair, she suddenly laughed.

"I was just kidding. How could I possibly sleep here tonight?"

Wan Miaoyin took out a phone from her bag.

"Here, I got your phone back from the production team."

Yin Lingzhu looked at the battered and broken phone lying in Wan Miaoyin's palm. "How did it become like this?"

She said in disbelief.

Wan Miaoyin placed the phone on the bedside table, then took out a brand new phone from her bag.

"The production team probably wanted to dig up some information from the phone, which is why it ended up like this."

Wan Miaoyin placed the unopened phone box on the bedside table, forming a stark contrast with the phone with the cracked screen.

"This is what I bought for you. You can use it once you switch the SIM card."

Yin Lingzhu looked at the phones on the bedside table, then turned her gaze to Wan Miaoyin.

"Thank you."

Wan Miaoyin just smiled faintly, said nothing, and walked out of the room.

Yin Lingzhu watched her retreating figure, picked up her phone, and entered the unlock code.

She opened the photo gallery and discovered that all the photos inside were gone.

Yin Lingzhu didn't like taking photos, and there weren't any photos of herself in the gallery either.

But there had been photos of Yan Si.

Photos of Yan Si that she had taken over the past year.

Now, they were all gone.

Yin Lingzhu stared at the empty phone, spacing out.

She didn't know how much time passed before she suddenly snapped back to reality.

She unconsciously browsed through her phone, then suddenly remembered that she had previously downloaded a backup app to prevent photo loss.

Yin Lingzhu hurriedly found that app and clicked into it without hesitation.

The first photo that came into view was of Yan Si.

This photo was one Yin Lingzhu had secretly taken.

Actually, most of the photos of Yan Si were secretly taken.

Yin Lingzhu just casually browsed through the app. After confirming all the photos were there, she returned to the phone's home screen.

After doing all this, Yin Lingzhu suddenly didn't understand what she was doing.

If Yan Si's photos were gone, so be it.

Why was she so nervous about it?

Yin Lingzhu was stunned for a moment, but soon snapped back to attention, refocusing on her phone.

Why think so much about it?

Yin Lingzhu thought irresponsibly and began playing with her phone.

The brand new, unopened phone box remained on the bedside table.

Yin Lingzhu didn't touch it, and just quietly spent the night like that.

Early the next morning, Yin Lingzhu was woken up by Wan Miaoyin.

"My dear ancestor¹, it's only seven o'clock now. Let me sleep a bit more."

Yin Lingzhu looked at the time and said painfully.

But Wan Miaoyin didn't give her this opportunity. She forcefully pulled Yin Lingzhu up from the bed.

"The doctor gave me a schedule. We must follow the schedule's timing and live each day well."

Yin Lingzhu wanted to cry but had no tears.

Under Wan Miaoyin's care, Yin Lingzhu really managed to be discharged after a week.

Although the cast wasn't removed, when Yin Lingzhu heard she could be discharged, she unhesitatingly requested to leave the hospital.

The moment she stepped out of the hospital lobby, Yin Lingzhu felt long-lost freedom.

Wan Miaoyin followed beside Yin Lingzhu. Seeing Yin Lingzhu's smile when she was discharged, her own smile couldn't be suppressed.

Yin Lingzhu looked at Wan Miaoyin and patted her shoulder.

These past few days, Wan Miaoyin had woken her up punctually at seven every morning and confiscated her phone at nine every night.

This made Yin Lingzhu's days very difficult and boring.

Just as Yin Lingzhu was about to speak, she discovered Yan Si standing at the entrance, watching her.

Her gaze immediately shifted away from Yan Si.

Footnotes:

¹ My dear ancestor: A colloquial Chinese expression used to address someone in an exaggerated, pleading way when they're being difficult or unreasonable—similar to saying "my dear lady" or "for heaven's sake" in English.