

Chapter 108 - Extra: Wedding (Part 2)

The next morning at five o'clock in the morning, when the sky wasn't even fully bright yet, the gates of the Feng family home opened.

Feng Yue, who was sleeping soundly in her room, was awakened by the ringtone of her phone. She had fallen asleep while video chatting with Yan Lin the night before, so when Yan Lin called, her phone was ringing right beside her ear.

The phone's ringtone wasn't particularly loud, but it was enough to wake up the drowsy Feng Yue.

Although she was sleepy, she still knew that today was a very important day, so she answered the phone. "Hello..."

Hearing Feng Yue's sleepy and unclear voice, Yan Lin chuckled softly. "A-Yue, haven't woken up yet?"

"Mm, so sleepy." Feng Yue held the phone to her ear with one hand, while her other hand tightly wrapped around the blanket, affectionately nuzzling against it.

Yan Lin also knew her personality, and after checking the time, said, "Then rest for five more minutes to recover. Get up after five minutes."

"Okay."

So Yan Lin held her phone and quietly waited for Feng Yue for five minutes. Only after five minutes did she speak up again: "A-Yue, five minutes are up."

Naturally, Feng Yue hadn't fallen asleep during those five minutes. Instead, listening to Yan Lin's breathing through the phone, her mind gradually became much clearer.

She sat up from the bed and stretched. "I'm up. I'm going to take a shower now. They should be arriving soon."

"Alright, go ahead. Baby, see you later."

Feng Yue's cheeks turned slightly red as she smiled and said, "See you later."

After saying this, the two little lovebirds finally hung up the phone.

The wedding was held in Beijing's largest manor, and the wedding venue decorations were personally supervised and modified bit by bit by Yan Lin with the wedding planning company.

All the flowers used in the entire wedding, including the bouquet in Feng Yue's hands, were primarily Chinese roses¹. Not a single regular rose appeared at the wedding.

The wedding venue was the manor's indoor banquet hall. The manor's main structure was a very ancient and mysterious castle, and as the castle's banquet hall, both its size and décor were very eye-catching.

Of course, all of this lost its appeal the moment Feng Yue appeared.

Feng Yue stood at the entrance of the banquet hall, with her father Feng Hehai standing beside her. Feng Hehai handed Feng Yue's hand to Yan Lin, who was waiting at the entrance, very reluctantly.

The moment Yan Lin took Feng Yue's hand, all the lights in the banquet hall dimmed, leaving only a spotlight shining on the two of them.

This beam of light was sufficient for all the wedding guests to clearly see the two main characters of the wedding.

Yan Lin wore a very form-fitting mermaid-style wedding dress. Intricate lace patterns wound from her fair, slender neck all the way down to her waist. The back featured a piece of hollow lace thinly covering it, while the hem was adorned with countless rhinestones and pearls starting from the waist.

Her seaweed-like long hair was all pinned up and hung behind her head, topped with an extremely simple veil that only had a blooming white Chinese rose embroidered at its end. She looked less like someone going to get married and more like an elegant queen about to be crowned.

Compared to Yan Lin's queen-like aura, Feng Yue was much gentler - a princess bathed in love and happiness.

Feng Yue's wedding dress was very magnificent. Unlike Yan Lin's, her dress had a sweetheart neckline. The very precious and gorgeous sapphire necklace around her neck hung at her throat, complementing the rows of teardrop-shaped diamonds on the bodice of her dress.

Starting from the waist down was a wide and large train. Like Yan Lin's, her dress train was also adorned with countless rhinestones and hand embroidery.

But what was most eye-catching was the veil covering Feng Yue's face. The veil was very wide and large, its length almost matching that of Feng Yue's dress train. This made Feng Yue appear even more mysterious and magnificent, making people hesitant to approach carelessly.

Under the gaze of all eyes, the two stepped onto the path to matrimony that was covered with bright red Chinese rose petals.

Yan Lin's gaze never left Feng Yue for a moment. It wasn't that she had never seen Feng Yue in this wedding dress before, but at this moment, Yan Lin still felt something was different.

It was probably a sacred sense of responsibility and belonging. The person standing beside her would be someone she would protect with all her might and at any cost from this moment on.

They would walk hand in hand through the rest of their lives, through each other's best and worst moments. They were the most intimate companions in the world, beings that even death could not separate.

The wedding officiant was Feng Yue's grandfather. The old gentleman was highly respected and had presided over many people's weddings, but this was his first time officiating a wedding for his own family.

"Feng Yue, are you willing to take this woman as your wife and enter into marriage with her? To love her, care for her, respect her, and accept her through sickness and health, poverty and wealth, or any other circumstances, remaining faithful to her until the end of life?"

Through the thin veil, Feng Yue gazed deeply into Yan Lin's eyes - those eyes she had loved for twelve years - then parted her red lips softly: "I do."

The old gentleman then looked at Yan Lin and asked, "Yan Lin, are you willing to take this woman as your wife and enter into marriage with her? To love her, care for her, respect her, and accept her through sickness and health, poverty and wealth, or any other circumstances, remaining faithful to her until the end of life?"

Yan Lin answered almost without hesitation, her response bursting forth the moment the old gentleman finished speaking: "I do!"

Then, the two seemed unable to hear any other sounds from the outside world. All they could hear were each other's breathing and heartbeats.

Under the gaze of all the guests, the two exchanged rings. Then Yan Lin gently lifted Feng Yue's veil, revealing those delicate and familiar eyes looking at her earnestly, as if looking at her entire world.

She took Feng Yue's hands, slightly closed her eyes, and devoutly and sacredly kissed those red lips.

A smile played at the corners of Feng Yue's mouth as she also closed her eyes and immersed herself in feeling Yan Lin's silent yet magnificent conquest.

"Let us offer our most sincere blessings to this new couple."

As the old gentleman's words fell, thunderous applause erupted throughout the banquet hall. Everyone, carrying their most beautiful wishes, looked at the sweet newlywed couple in front.

Amid the roaring applause, Yan Lin released Feng Yue. The two pressed their foreheads together, and Yan Lin's voice was very small - so small that only Feng Yue could hear clearly.

"I swear before all the gods and Buddhas that I will love you forever. Even death cannot separate us."

"A-Yue, I love you."

Feng Yue's eyes curved into crescents as she actively raised her head and planted a kiss on Yan Lin's forehead, her tone very serious and solemn.

"Yan Lin, I love you too."

From age fourteen, until eternity.

Footnotes:

1. Chinese roses (月季): Also known as modern roses or garden roses. The choice to use Chinese roses instead of regular roses (玫瑰) in the wedding is symbolic - "月季" literally contains the character "月" (moon/month), which is part of Feng Yue's name (封月), making this a personal and meaningful choice for their wedding flowers.