

Chapter 137 - Fooling Around

Her nasal "good" was like opening some kind of floodgate, causing their half-hidden hearts to burst forth like a flood, no longer able to contain their love. Ning Fuyi lowered her head to kiss her lightly. The moment their lips met, both of their bodies were suffused with a faint rosy hue.

The stone chamber had originally been filled with dark coolness, but now all that coolness seemed to be blocked by the curtains, leaving only warm floral fragrance. The flower scent was like the sweetest enchantment, stirring non-existent heart worms.

Ning Fuyi gripped those soft hands tighter with both hands, adding force to her lips, until she heard increasingly rapid breathing from the other party and felt the waist beneath her turning left and right, only then did she raise her head.

Chu Qingqiu's eyes were already veiled with thin mist, speaking somewhat helplessly: "Yiyi..."

"Since you said good, you cannot take it back," Ning Fuyi used her hand to cover her lips.

Chu Qingqiu was left with only the sound of breathing. Finally, she raised her hand, pressed against the back of Ning Fuyi's neck, and lifted her head to find her lips. Ning Fuyi also closed her eyes accordingly, accepting her initiative. For a time they were reluctant to part, neither willing to admit defeat.

Finally, unable to breathe, they separated with low moans. Chu Qingqiu covered her lips with the back of her hand, breathing deeply to let her nearly depleted chest cavity fill again.

"What are you laughing at?" she hoarsely scolded the smirking Ning Fuyi. "Could it be that you held your breath?"

"Is that how you see me?" Ning Fuyi found Chu Qingqiu, who wanted to compete in everything, surprisingly adorable. "If you don't open your mouth for so long, how can you breathe?"

Chu Qingqiu's eyes moved slightly, recalling the earlier scene. As she thought about it, the red beneath her eyes deepened, and she pushed her, commanding: "Extinguish the lights."

"Why?" Ning Fuyi glanced at the candlelight. "You don't want to see me?"

"Shameless," Chu Qingqiu reached out to poke her waist. Ning Fuyi quickly dodged.

"It's not like we haven't dual cultivated before," Ning Fuyi hurriedly pressed down her restless hand.

"How is that the same?" Chu Qingqiu frowned, trying hard not to look at Ning Fuyi's eyes. "Back then... we couldn't see anything."

Ning Fuyi giggled, covering her mouth as she laughed for a long while, until Chu Qingqiu's gaze turned ice-cold, only then saying: "You've already seen me several times. What's wrong with letting me see once?"

However, just as her words fell, her eyes were suddenly covered with a layer of white silk, binding her so that she nearly fell to one side. The woman's body rolled once to press down on her, pinning her so she couldn't move.

Ning Fuyi had no intention of struggling either, relaxing as she lay there, letting Chu Qingqiu have her way with her. However, the woman who had gained the upper hand suddenly stopped moving.

Ning Fuyi had just finished bathing, her clothes were already irregularly worn, and now after such tearing they were half open. Her ghost-pale skin was now colored, like cloud wisps under the sunset.

If the earlier glimpse was like a startled swan, now looking directly like this, Chu Qingqiu felt more like lightning passing through her spine, not knowing where to place her hands.

The woman's body hidden under black robes had somehow become so beautiful - the dark hair falling on her shoulders, the joints tinged with red blush. It wasn't hesitation or reserve, but like a blade unsheathed, beautiful with sharp oppression.

She seemed to know she was beautiful, her hand sliding over the flower petals on the bed, propping up her body. When she had completely sat up, Chu Qingqiu was straddling her knees.

Only then did Chu Qingqiu realize this, turning to leave. However, those arms had somehow encircled her, not only not letting her go but also lifting the knees slightly.

So Chu Qingqiu slid closer again, having to brace against her shoulder, her eyes clear yet helpless.

The woman grew increasingly hot, holding her felt like steamed dough. Hot currents flowed through Ning Fuyi's body as she blindly grasped her back spine, supporting the back of her head.

Light points surged from her sea of consciousness, and those light points also called forth Chu Qingqiu's. The viscous light separated from both their seas of consciousness, illuminating the room, slowly rising above the curtains.

The pink light points rapidly surged toward the white ones, almost instantly enveloping and fusing them. Chu Qingqiu nearly screamed, barely restraining herself by covering her mouth, her body instantly going soft against Ning Fuyi.

They embraced each other fully. The long-missed devouring sensation made the lights before Chu Qingqiu's eyes turn into dazzling shadows, finally becoming complete darkness. It was a long time before she slowly recovered.

She had almost suffocated. The overly intense attack on her sea of consciousness had already made tears flow down, the tears soaking Ning Fuyi's shoulder. Chu Qingqiu suddenly opened her mouth and bit down on Ning Fuyi's shoulder, as if punishing her presumptuous actions.

It wasn't that they had never cultivated like this before, but then and now were ultimately different.

Like a woman who always covered her face removing her veil - everything was completely and thoroughly exposed to view.

Ning Fuyi was bitten until her shoulder stung, so she released her hands wanting to say something, but when she met those peach blossom eyes that were no longer clear, she couldn't say anything.

The moon in the sky was cold precisely because it rose in the east and set in the west, never losing control. However, once this rule was broken, only the earth's shocking waves remained.

The scene of the always self-controlled woman crying and trembling in her arms was enough to ignite blazing fire in Ning Fuyi's heart. She held the woman tighter, and with a hook of her fingertip, wind covered her shoulders.

She turned to place the woman among the flower petals, her eyes also gradually染上 boundless shocking waves.

In Chu Qingqiu's eyes, Ning Fuyi's face seemed embedded in time, overlapping with memories. When the waves in her eyes receded, tears rolled from the corners of her eyes.

Watching her grow through two lifetimes, thousands of years of waiting had reached their end at this moment. Those nights of solitary waiting were cast behind, leaving only brilliant lamplight before her eyes.

The moment desire flooded her entire body, Chu Qingqiu crushed the flower petals, calling her name like delirium.

"Ning Fuyi," she murmured. "Whatever you want, I'll give you everything."

...

Purple Cloud Peak had been barren for thousands of years, yet on an ordinary late spring night, withered trees sprouted and flowers bloomed luxuriantly¹.

The sounds from the stone hall continued all night, the gardenia fragrance had never been so rich, so rich that the entire mountaintop was filled with fragrance, as if the whole mountain was blooming with gardenias.

Fortunately, the stone hall isolated those sobbing cries, low pleas, and words spoken in deep passion, so even the moon didn't blush upon hearing them.

Until dawn broke, the moon sank and sun rose, and bird calls rang from distant mountains, only then did the crying within the curtains gradually cease, replaced by weary tranquility.

Wind blew across the mountain full of flowers. With no one disturbing the mountaintop, Ning Fuyi slept sweetly, sleeping until the sun shone overhead before reluctantly separating from her dreams and opening her eyes.

The bed still bore traces of last night. The woman slept deeply with her back to her, black hair covering half her body. Ning Fuyi's face flushed and her heart raced as she reached out to cover her with outer robes, then lay on her side, unable to suppress the smile on her lips.

Seeing the always clear-minded Chu Qingqiu sleeping like this, she must truly be extremely exhausted. Ning Fuyi felt pity and reached out to embrace her waist. The woman suddenly turned over, responding in her sleep.

She curled her upper body, burying into Ning Fuyi's chest, her hand unconsciously falling on Ning Fuyi's waist. Her sleeping expression was peaceful and light, only the unreceded blush on her cheeks showed how this morning differed from others.

Ning Fuyi's gaze drifted, electric currents surging through her heart again. Helplessly, she raised her hand to tuck the outer robe more securely.

Every minute of last night's memories could make her heart flutter endlessly - watching the usually cold woman's eyes full of desire at the height of passion, watching her unable to bear it and pleading aloud, it could drive one mad.

Ning Fuyi struggled from the memories. Just then, a tiger's roar came from outside. The woman instantly opened her eyes, terrifyingly calm.

However, that calmness changed color the moment she saw Ning Fuyi. Chu Qingqiu looked down at herself, slightly closed her eyes, and pressed her lips together.

"You can't say you forgot this time, can you?" Ning Fuyi smiled, supporting her temple.

"Put on your clothes," Chu Qingqiu didn't answer, saying instead.

Only then did Ning Fuyi realize her own clothes were quite disheveled. She blushed for a moment but quickly overcame the embarrassment, lowering her head to tie her robes.

As she tied her robes, Chu Qingqiu's whole body was covered in white light. Then she rose and landed on the ground, the white light transforming into robes, completely covering all traces on her body.

Turning her back after waking up - Ning Fuyi sighed with some displeasure, slowly getting up to put on her outer robe.

"Chu Qingqiu!" Ning Fuyi crawled toward the front of the bed, binding her hair behind her. "Don't you have anything to say to me?"

Chu Qingqiu's movements paused, then she used her sleeve to cover her wrist ornament and turned to look at her: "Say what?"

Ning Fuyi's mouth opened and closed, not knowing for a moment what she wanted to hear, only feeling that after waking she was like a completely different person from yesterday, making her feel uneasy.

She said sullenly: "Never mind, it's nothing. Where are you rushing to go?"

"After dual cultivation, calming the mind in meditation can stabilize cultivation," Chu Qingqiu answered truthfully. Finally, she secured her white bone staff at her waist and lifted her leg to leave.

Her steps paused as she saw Ning Fuyi's absent-minded expression. Finally, she walked back, bent over in front of her, pinched her earlobe with her fingers until it hurt before stopping.

"Remember to be gentler next time," she withdrew her reddened fingertips, saying softly. "No matter how high my cultivation, I'm still not made of iron."

"Don't forget to cultivate," she left another sentence and went out the door.

Ning Fuyi broke free from the flower fragrance, the words mixed with breath still lingering by her ear. She couldn't help but rub her ear and laugh, laughing alone for a long time before following her advice to sit cross-legged in meditation.

At first, her mind was still filled with last night's absurdity, but after sitting and smelling the flower fragrance for a while, only the vast sea of consciousness remained.

After meditating for an hour, she opened her eyes. The moment she opened them, she felt coolness throughout her body. Outside the hall, wind blew through the sea of flowers, and the sound of petals colliding fell clearly into her ears.

Originally it was just deep passion, but she hadn't expected such wonderful effects. Ning Fuyi stared at the lines in her palm for a long while before standing up.

After one night, Purple Cloud Peak was completely different from before going to sleep. Not only was there a vista of red flowers and green willows, but many high-flying birds had also settled, chirping and hopping about.

White Lin was chasing birds around joyfully, flying past Ning Fuyi several times.

Ning Fuyi stepped quickly through the flower clusters, finding Chu Qingqiu at the cliff edge. She sat facing the mountains, gentle winds rising around her, feather-like light points swirling with the wind, extending into mid-air, becoming sparser and more blurred the farther they went, connecting with mountain peaks and cloud wisps.

This scene was like spring snow flying, with all the snow falling solely on her shoulders.

Ning Fuyi couldn't help but be stunned. She stood in the distance with hands behind her back, unable to hide her shock. So Chu Qingqiu's heaven-reaching cultivation wasn't without reason. No one cultivated like her, easily able to summon heaven and earth's favor, with spiritual energy pouring down on her alone.

No wonder she was the only elf to cultivate to True God realm. No wonder she said she was born for heaven and earth.

Ning Fuyi stood in black robes under the sunlight, yet her eyes couldn't reflect half a point of brilliance.

After a long while, when Ning Fuyi's shoulders were hot enough to smoke, the flying feathers above Chu Qingqiu's head finally dimmed. She wasn't unaware of Ning Fuyi's arrival - after withdrawing her power, she called to her.

When Ning Fuyi walked behind her, only then did she turn her head: "Why watch for so long?"

"Just amazed that you cultivate so quickly. I can't match you at all," Ning Fuyi sighed, half-crouching beside her to pick fallen leaves from her shoulder.

"You don't need to compare with me," Chu Qingqiu said, her voice indifferently pleasant. "You have your own strengths."

"What strengths - cultivating demons?" Ning Fuyi joked. "How could I compare with you? My Divine Venerable is worth ten others. I'm too happy to complain."

"Yours?" Chu Qingqiu's brow slightly raised.

"You said it yourself yesterday, saying you'd give me everything. You absolutely cannot take it back," Ning Fuyi teased.

"More and more foolish," though Chu Qingqiu said this, her face showed a hint of blush. Suddenly she was lifted horizontally by Ning Fuyi and immediately began struggling.

Just as the two were laughing and playing, the barrier suddenly materialized. A group of people came flying on swords, immediately crashing into the barrier and falling in a confused heap, panicking when they saw Ning Fuyi and Chu Qingqiu.

"Ning Fuyi!" Chu Qingqiu grew anxious, raising her hand to knock Ning Fuyi once before spinning to the ground.

Footnotes:

1. 花开荼蘼 (flowers bloomed luxuriantly) - 荼蘼 (tu mi) refers to a type of white flower that blooms at the end of spring, often symbolizing the peak of beauty or the end of prosperity. Here it suggests the mountain blooming with unprecedented abundance.