

Chapter 46 - Heart Disease

Ever since Yan Lin was sent abroad by her father, she had been living a life with reversed day and night cycles. The overseas company affairs weren't actually urgent, but Yan Lin still compressed her rest time to finish dealing with them ahead of schedule.

It wasn't that she wanted to return home early, but she still had to rush to Germany to meet a medical expert in the brain field. This expert was currently participating in a grand academic exchange conference in Germany.

The conference would end in just these few days.

Yan Lin didn't take Mo Yixu with her to Germany this time, but went alone.

Although most of the overseas company affairs had been handled, there were still some finishing touches that needed Mo Yixu to deal with.

Fortunately, Yan Lin had already arranged to meet this expert through her father's connections long ago. After getting off the plane, she could go directly to see him.

This expert was someone Yan Lin had asked her father to contact when she first returned from rebirth. At that time, Feng Yue's condition hadn't been disclosed yet, and she couldn't tell her father directly, only saying it was at a friend's request. Although her father was curious, he didn't ask much and finally contacted the expert through multiple acquaintances some time ago.

At 9 PM local time, Yan Lin went straight to the hotel where the expert was staying after getting off the plane, and she also checked into this hotel.

The medical exchange conference would end punctually at 10 AM tomorrow, and her appointment with the expert was scheduled for after 2 PM.

Yan Lin, who had been traveling non-stop through the night, could finally stop and catch her breath. After briefly tidying herself up, she sank into the soft bedding.

Yan Lin closed her eyes trying to fall asleep, but the room's lighting made her eyes hurt, making it completely impossible to sleep.

The room didn't have the small night light she needed. After enduring for a while, she still chose to sit up and call the front desk, asking if they could provide her with a desk lamp or something similar.

The hotel staff politely indicated they didn't provide this service. Yan Lin hung up the phone with a frown, leaning against the headboard with a tired expression.

Yan Lin closed her eyes to rest, her temples throbbing with pain, making it completely impossible for her to concentrate on thinking.

She simply stopped forcing herself and let her thoughts wander freely.

Once she relaxed, she couldn't help thinking about Feng Yue, who was far away in the country.

The events of that night were vivid in her memory, including the scene of Feng Yue collapsing from exhaustion at the end, deeply imprinted in her mind.

She had drunk quite a bit that night. After Mo Yixu drove her to Songhe Bay, she had even sat alone in the car for over an hour before getting out to swipe her card and take the elevator up from the underground parking garage.

She did all this to avoid Feng Yue, but she hadn't expected Feng Yue to come home so late that night.

However, she had no reason to blame Feng Yue for this. She was the one who insisted on moving to Songhe Bay, and she was the one who took advantage of being drunk to assault Feng Yue.

She could imagine that Feng Yue's attitude toward her now would definitely be worse than before, but all of this was self-inflicted.

From the previous life onwards, she had been constantly consuming Feng Yue's love for her, but Yan Lin didn't understand why Feng Yue had changed so much.

She had clearly written that letter when she was seriously ill, clearly wanted to see her one more time before parting—these all proved that Feng Yue still loved her.

But why was this life different? Where exactly had things gone wrong?

Yan Lin frowned tightly, wanting to carefully consider when Feng Yue's changes had begun.

Was it from the divorce?

No, it should have been even earlier.

Yan Lin's vision seemed shrouded in a layer of mist. The answer she wanted was behind the mist, but she couldn't see it clearly no matter what.

She wanted to find the reason for Feng Yue's transformation—that might be the beginning of Feng Yue giving up on her in this life.

Yan Lin thought carefully, and gradually drowsiness crept up on her. Without realizing it, she slowly fell asleep.

At 2 PM the next day, Yan Lin kept her appointment punctually. The place where he had arranged to meet her was in an independent reception room downstairs at the hotel. She held Feng Yue's medical records in her hand and was led to the reception room by a waiter.

The person who opened the door was a young blonde woman. When she saw Yan Lin, a flash of amazement crossed her eyes.

"You must be Miss Yan. Dr. Wendell is already waiting for you."

Yan Lin nodded slightly and thanked her: "Thank you."

Upon seeing Dr. Wendell's familiar face, Yan Lin finally breathed a slight sigh of relief.

This Dr. Wendell was the doctor who had been responsible for Feng Yue's condition in the previous life, and he was also the one who had personally announced Feng Yue's death.

Seeing him again, Yan Lin still felt a bit of lingering fear.

"Dr. Wendell, hello. Your time is precious, so I'll make this brief." Yan Lin handed the medical records to Wendell. "These are my—my wife's recent medical records. Please take a look first."

Wendell was a doctor, so he naturally preferred to see the patient in person. "Miss Yan, you should understand that it's very difficult to make a judgment based on medical records alone. I need to see the patient herself."

"I'm sorry, but due to certain reasons, I'm temporarily unable to bring her to see you, so I'll have to trouble you this time."

Wendell sighed and had to start looking at the medical records. After Wendell finished reading, his expression was somewhat strange, and he even had a kind of humiliated anger as if he'd been played with.

"Miss Yan, your wife's condition is gradually improving, and because it was discovered early, the brain tumor hasn't developed to an uncontrollable stage. There are even signs of the tumor shrinking due to medication control. Her illness is milder than the vast majority of brain cancer patients. What's the significance of your special trip to see me today?"

Yan Lin listened carefully to Wendell's words and said lightly: "You are an expert in the brain field in the medical community. I just hope that my wife's condition is indeed improving as you said."

Wendell was stunned for a few seconds before understanding that this lady had gone to great lengths to see him just to buy peace of mind.

This feeling of caring for one's wife moved Wendell. He sighed and said with certainty: "Well, Miss Yan, if that's the case, then I can tell you with great certainty that your wife's condition is indeed improving and there's no life-threatening danger."

Yan Lin nodded, finally feeling a great weight lifted from her heart. It wasn't that she didn't trust the domestic doctors, but she had an obsession—she hoped that the doctor who had announced Feng Yue's death in the previous life would personally tell her that Feng Yue's illness was improving and wouldn't endanger her life.

Feng Yue's death was a heart disease<sup>1</sup> in her mind. In the previous life, she had lived alone in a world without Feng Yue for three years, lonely and aimless.

She thought she was just not used to Feng Yue's departure. No one told her that the deceased Feng Yue had taken away the part of her heart called "love."

After rebirth, this part was returned because Feng Yue was alive, but the long-term separation still made her particularly concerned.

She needed someone to completely heal this festering wound, needed someone to tell her that Feng Yue would never again be taken away by illness.

And all of this could only be done by the doctor who had originally announced Feng Yue's death—Wendell.

Only by hearing from Wendell's own mouth that Feng Yue was recovering would Yan Lin completely put her mind at ease.

Yan Lin's conversation with Wendell ended quickly. Before leaving, Yan Lin still carefully asked him whether the medications Feng Yue was currently taking were appropriate.

However, Dr. Wendell told Yan Lin: "The dosage of medication is decided by each doctor after personally observing and talking with the patient. I haven't seen your wife in person, so I'm not qualified to interfere with this doctor's prescription."

Yan Lin understood and watched Wendell and his assistant leave the reception room.

Her conversation with Wendell lasted less than an hour—things went more smoothly than she had imagined.

Since that was the case, she could return home early.

Yan Lin had her assistant book a flight back home tonight and then prepared to return to her room to pack.

Just as she stood up to leave the reception room, her phone vibrated.

She frowned and took out her phone—it was a message from Dai Shuangshuang.

Yan Lin had a bad premonition. She opened Dai Shuangshuang's chat window. The girl had only sent her one sentence and one image.

Dai Shuangshuang: [Sis, look and see if this is Sister Yueyue? [image.jpg]]

Yan Lin opened the image. The picture was somewhat blurry, like a screenshot taken after zooming in, but Yan Lin still recognized Feng Yue's figure from this grainy image.

Feng Yue's expression seemed to be smiling as she looked at the person in front of her, while that person was reaching out to touch the top of Feng Yue's head. Their posture couldn't be described as anything other than intimate.

Looking at Feng Yue in the photo, Yan Lin felt as if her throat was being tightly gripped by a hand, making it hard to breathe.

Dai Shuangshuang looked at the "the other party is typing..." displayed in the chat window and knew her sister had seen the message, but the other party hadn't sent any message for a long time.

Dai Shuangshuang: [Sis?] She sent another inquiring message.

This slight vibration pulled Yan Lin's thoughts back. She was stung by the undisguised joy on Feng Yue's face, that electric numbness traveling through her blood to her fingertips.

She forced herself to type with one hand while crumpling the medical records with the other.

Yan Lin: [Where did you see this?]

Dai Shuangshuang replied instantly: [I have a friend—this is a photo from their law firm's team building. The person talking to Sister Yueyue seems to be from their law firm too.]

Then Dai Shuangshuang went to Kong Ruifu's WeChat Moments<sup>2</sup> and took the group photo, circled out the woman in the white athletic outfit, and sent it to Yan Lin.

Dai Shuangshuang: [It seems to be this one. Although you can't see the face clearly in the first photo, the clothes are the same.]

Yan Lin looked at the woman circled in the photo, and an intense jealousy and hatred toward her arose uncontrollably in her heart.

The unease and sense of crisis originally brought by Wen Zhen became even stronger due to this woman's appearance.

Yan Lin no longer had the energy to care about what else Dai Shuangshuang sent later. She saved the circled photo and sent it to Mo Yixu.

Then she made a phone call.

It was 9 AM on Mo Yixu's side, and he was currently in his final meeting.

Seeing the caller ID on his phone, he quickly reached out to interrupt other executives' speeches and answered the call.

"Boss Yan, is something wrong?"

"The photo I sent you—investigate the identity of the person circled. Also, have someone send me a report on Feng Yue's whereabouts in the country during my time abroad."

"Understood."

After Mo Yixu finished speaking, the other end hung up. He gestured for his meeting colleagues to continue while thinking about what Yan Lin had asked him to do.

Why doesn't Boss Yan ever learn her lesson? She was just sent abroad by Chairman Yan because of Miss Feng, so why is she trying to provoke Miss Feng again?

Mo Yixu couldn't understand, so he could only dutifully carry out what Yan Lin had instructed.

---

Footnotes:

<sup>1</sup> 心病 (heart disease) - In this context, it refers to psychological trauma or obsession rather than a physical heart condition—something that weighs heavily on one's mind and causes emotional pain.

<sup>2</sup> 朋友圈 (friend circle) - Refers to WeChat Moments, a social media feature in WeChat where users can share photos and updates with their contacts.