

Chapter 71 - Ironic

The day after returning to China, Yan Lin called Feng Yue.

After what happened that night, Feng Yue felt a bit embarrassed to hang up on her directly. Looking at the caller ID on her phone, she found it quite troublesome.

Finally, when the phone rang for the third time, she answered: "Hello."

"A Yue, it's me." Yan Lin didn't seem annoyed that Feng Yue had taken so long to answer. Instead, she spoke about business very calmly.

"Mm, what's the matter?"

"A Yue, you remember Dr. Wendell, right?" Yan Lin asked.

Dr. Wendell's face appeared in Feng Yue's mind: "I remember."

She couldn't possibly forget Dr. Wendell, since he was the one who had announced her time of death.

She even remembered how he had worked tirelessly with the medical staff to resuscitate her when her life hung by a thread.

Yan Lin wasn't surprised that she remembered Wendell, but Feng Yue didn't know why she was suddenly asking about this.

"What's wrong?"

"I recently heard that he'll be coming to China in a few days. Would you be willing to let him give you a detailed examination?"

Yan Lin didn't mention that she had specifically gone to invite Wendell. She didn't want Feng Yue to feel burdened by these things.

Hearing this, Feng Yue was somewhat surprised. When she first arrived here, she had thought about contacting Wendell, but after treating with Professor Fang for a while, she had dismissed the idea.

First, because she had gone to the hospital early this time and her condition was still controllable; second, because she clearly remembered how busy Dr. Wendell had been during this period in her previous life.

In her previous life, it was Yan Lin's father who had used connections to contact Dr. Wendell. They had naturally paid a high price to invite him to China to treat Feng Yue, but because he really couldn't get away, Feng Yue had ended up going overseas for treatment.

Feng Yue wasn't sure if Wendell really had business in China, but she could be certain that Yan Lin had played a role in making Wendell's trip to China happen.

Yan Lin hadn't heard Feng Yue speak for a while, so she called out to remind her: "A Yue?"

"Mm." Feng Yue came back to her senses, thought about it, and nodded in agreement: "Alright, when would he roughly be available? I'll go."

Although Feng Yue knew her fate was death and had already prepared her bucket list.

But for the long trip abroad with her parents, they would definitely worry about whether her body could handle it. Having Wendell's examination report would put them much more at ease.

Additionally, Feng Yue also wanted to see if, under Wendell's diagnosis, she had any other problems.

The two agreed on a time, and Feng Yue hung up the phone.

She looked down at the darkened phone screen, feeling complicated.

Since she had known Yan Lin, the other person had basically never lied. Yan Lin's attempts to hide things this time really had that "the coverup reveals the crime"¹ quality.

But Feng Yue didn't care anymore. Whether Yan Lin had really invited Wendell for her, she no longer minded.

Whether it was Wendell or anyone else, no one in this world could save her anymore. Going for an examination was just to put her parents' minds at ease.

Yan Lin hung up the phone, a hint of joy flashing in her eyes. Good, she probably hadn't been exposed, A Yue had also agreed to the examination, and everything was developing in a positive direction.

After handling Feng Yue's matter, she finally had time to deal with some accumulated affairs from the past few days.

As soon as she opened her email, she saw the information about the person who had appeared in the video that day, which she had ordered investigated before going to Germany.

Yan Lin skimmed through all the information but found nothing wrong.

This Chu An'an was just a very ordinary film academy student who had debuted in the center position through a talent competition, and currently had good popularity and many fans.

She and Feng Yue had absolutely no connection.

Yan Lin looked at this information and fell into thought, then contacted Mo Yixu through the internal line.

Soon, Mo Yixu knocked on Yan Lin's office door: "President Yan, you called for me."

"About Chu An'an's matter, is this all you found?" Yan Lin pointed to the email content on her computer screen.

Mo Yixu nodded and explained: "Yes, Chu An'an's information is very normal with nothing surprising. Her family background, educational background, and personal relationships are all very ordinary."

"Which company did she sign with? Is it possible that the company had already processed her information beforehand?" Yan Lin twirled her pen, unable to figure out what relationship this person could have with Feng Yue.

"That possibility can't be ruled out, but she's a bit different from other celebrities in the entertainment industry. She came from a talent show and hadn't signed with any entertainment company before - she was just an ordinary person."

The implication was that ordinary people wouldn't need to deliberately process their background information.

Yan Lin nodded, frowning as if she couldn't figure it out.

"I understand. You can go out first."

Mo Yixu nodded and prepared to leave. But when he reached the door, he remembered something and turned back: "Oh right, President Yan, there's something I forgot to tell you."

Yan Lin: "Mm?"

"The person investigating Chu An'an's background told me that someone else had investigated her a few months ago."

"Who?" Yan Lin had a vague guess in her heart.

"The other party only said the surname was Feng, didn't give me the full name." But Mo Yixu himself thought this person was Feng Yue.

Yan Lin obviously thought the same way, but she didn't say much and just let Mo Yixu leave.

Although Yan Lin didn't have concrete evidence that it was Feng Yue who had investigated Chu An'an, she had already convinced herself of this fact.

But she still didn't understand why Feng Yue would investigate a student who had just entered university.

Yan Lin couldn't figure it out and finally had to give up.

There was no way around it - she currently had too little information.

Unable to think it through, Yan Lin had to throw herself completely into work.

When she finished handling the accumulated affairs and prepared to relax by watching Feng Yue's videos, she saw the "Update Hiatus Announcement" posted on Feng Yue's homepage.

The day Feng Yue and Yan Lin had agreed on for the examination with Dr. Wendell quickly arrived.

The location was at the private hospital where Wei Yuran and Professor Fang worked. The various medical equipment there was top-notch, and Professor Fang and Wendell could have a good discussion about Feng Yue's condition.

Wendell had arrived in Beijing the afternoon before. He had adjusted to the time difference well and went to the hospital early that morning to discuss Feng Yue's condition with Professor Fang.

When Feng Yue arrived at the hospital, everyone was already assembled, waiting for her in a small conference room.

Yan Lin sat properly in the conference room, seriously listening to Wendell and Professor Fang's conversation. These words were all about Feng Yue's condition and couldn't be taken lightly.

"Sorry, I'm late." Feng Yue pushed open the conference room door and saw the scene inside that was comparable to a three-judge trial. She felt a bit like backing down.

Wasn't this a bit exaggerated...

But when she saw Dr. Wendell's familiar face, gratitude still surged in her heart.

In her previous life, it was Dr. Wendell who had repeatedly snatched her back from the hands of death.

Although she had died in the end, she knew that Dr. Wendell had done his best at the time.

Physical examinations should be the most familiar thing to Feng Yue recently, aside from eating and sleeping, so she quickly adapted to Dr. Wendell's consultation rhythm.

Yan Lin had been quiet since Feng Yue arrived, but was still listening seriously.

After the consultation, Feng Yue had to go for various tests. She was already familiar with these procedures to the point where she couldn't be more familiar.

So when Yan Lin offered to accompany her, Feng Yue responded without thinking: "No need, I'm already used to going alone."

Feng Yue didn't mean to be sarcastic toward Yan Lin, but after hearing this, Yan Lin's heart tightened.

Whether in her previous life or this life, the number of times she had accompanied Feng Yue to the hospital for examinations could be counted on one hand.

Sometimes, although she had come with the other person, she hadn't fulfilled the duties of a caregiver at all, like a wooden dummy who couldn't speak, only knowing to follow behind Feng Yue foolishly.

Seeing that the other person's expression had immediately turned ugly, Feng Yue added: "I don't mean anything by it. I can manage by myself."

Yan Lin didn't respond to her words, just stubbornly stood up, lowering her head with her hands awkwardly clasped behind her back: "I'll accompany you."

The firmness and persistence in her tone brooked no refusal. Feng Yue opened her mouth and swallowed her rejection.

If she wanted to follow along, then let her follow. Her presence didn't add much, and her absence didn't subtract much.

Only then did the two follow the nurse's guidance, going through the examination list item by item.

Some examination items required Feng Yue to complete them alone, so Yan Lin could only wait silently outside the door.

One examination would make patients dizzy and nauseous afterward.

Previously, Feng Yue had always prepared mineral water and candy herself to suppress this feeling.

But today Feng Yue forgot to prepare, so she could only obediently rush to the toilet and start dry heaving while hugging the toilet.

Yan Lin had looked up all the examination items Feng Yue would have today yesterday, so naturally she knew what Feng Yue's reaction was about.

She followed Feng Yue into the toilet and handed her the mineral water she had prepared in advance after opening it.

"Are you feeling very uncomfortable? Rinse your mouth first, then eat some candy." She said while reaching out to stroke Feng Yue's spine repeatedly, hoping she would feel better.

Feng Yue silently accepted Yan Lin's help. She rinsed her mouth and tore open the candy wrapper to put it in her mouth.

The sweet and sour plum flavor and a trace of acidity that stimulated her tongue spread in her mouth, finally suppressing the feeling of wanting to vomit in her heart.

Faced with Yan Lin's meticulous care, Feng Yue felt no emotion or warmth in her heart, only abnormal calm.

It could even be said there was a bit of sadness and irony.

She had done so many things for Yan Lin before, but the other person had never taken them to heart. Instead, it was after their divorce.

Only then did Yan Lin start trying to please her from every angle.

So Yan Lin really wasn't incapable of caring for people - it was just that the Yan Lin of the past had never taken her to heart at all.

Therefore, Feng Yue couldn't believe how much sincerity the current Yan Lin actually had toward her.

1. "The coverup reveals the crime" (此地无银三百两) - A Chinese idiom meaning that attempting to hide something only makes it more obvious. It comes from a folk tale about someone who buried silver and left a sign saying "no silver buried here," which only drew attention to the hidden treasure.
