

Chapter 75 - Showdown

The fallen paper lay quietly there, but the words on it exploded like thunder in Wen Zhen's mind.

"Bucket list¹..."

Just those four words in the title made Wen Zhen's entire body turn cold.

Her breathing gradually became rapid. She swallowed and then crouched down to pick up the paper.

She examined it carefully, afraid she might miss a word and misunderstand something.

But even after reading it three times, she could only draw one conclusion from the contents of this paper.

Feng Yue was planning the remainder of her life, using a simple A4 sheet² to write down all the things she wanted to do, then face death without regret.

Wen Zhen's expression was extremely grim. For a moment, she didn't know what she should do.

Should she call Feng Yue first to ask, or should she contact Feng Yue's parents first, or something else?

But before Wen Zhen could decide what to do, her phone suddenly rang.

Wen Zhen was startled. When she saw the caller ID, her heart tightened even more. She exhaled and tried to calm her emotions, making her voice sound the same as usual.

"Hello, Ah Yue."

"Wen Zhen sister, did you get the books? The residential concierge sent me a message saying you've arrived."

Wen Zhen looked at the paper in her hand and replied in a deep voice: "Yes, I got them."

"Good. There are quite a few books in my bookshelf. Take whatever you need—I won't have much use for them anyway."

Wen Zhen was already on edge, and hearing Feng Yue say such things made her explode completely.

"What do you mean you won't have use for them? Are you never going to read again? Are you never going to make videos again? What about those fans waiting for you?"

Feng Yue was startled by Wen Zhen's sudden questioning, but before she could say anything, she heard Wen Zhen speak again.

"Sorry, sorry. I didn't mean to interrogate you. I just think it's such a pity that you suddenly stopped updating... very regrettable."

Feng Yue said it was fine and naturally didn't doubt Wen Zhen's words. They chatted for a while longer before hanging up.

Wen Zhen's hand holding the phone hung limply at her side, while her other hand tightly clutched that piece of paper.

Wen Zhen stayed in the study for a long time, constantly thinking about what she should do. It wasn't until snow began to fall outside the window that she straightened up and prepared to leave.

Wen Zhen returned to her car and found that blocked phone number in her contacts, then dialed it.

"Hello, it's me." Wen Zhen's expression was grave as she said directly: "I need to see Yan Lin. In half an hour at Chuncha Garden³. It's about Feng Yue."

After saying that, she hung up without waiting for a response.

Fu Sixue, who had been hung up on by Wen Zhen, opened her mouth but didn't get a chance to say a word.

She looked at the ended call interface and raised her eyebrows, suddenly very curious about what had happened to make Wen Zhen call her to contact A Lin.

But curiosity aside, Fu Sixue immediately called Yan Lin.

Half an hour later, Yan Lin and Fu Sixue appeared punctually at Chuncha Garden.

Chuncha Garden was a teahouse, but there weren't many customers inside, probably because it was spring break⁴ and not many people would come to a teahouse.

Wen Zhen had arrived a bit earlier than the other two, so when she saw them, she actively stood up to greet them.

"Miss Yan, over here."

Fu Sixue saw her and the smile on her face deepened.

Perhaps because of their past relationship as romantic rivals, Yan Lin had no good feelings toward Wen Zhen. If this meeting wasn't about Feng Yue, she wouldn't have come to see her.

"Miss Wen, long time no see." Although Yan Lin disliked her, she didn't neglect basic courtesy.

The three sat down in the coffee shop. Wen Zhen didn't beat around the bush and asked Yan Lin directly: "Miss Yan, I know you specifically went to Germany to bring a doctor to examine Ah Yue's health. May I ask what the specific results were?"

Yan Lin raised her eyebrows slightly and turned to look at Fu Sixue, who just smiled and shrugged. It was obvious who had told Wen Zhen about this matter.

"The examination results naturally showed that she's fine." Yan Lin answered with a frown.

"Then—"

"Miss Wen." Yan Lin interrupted before she could continue asking. "I think you should be very clear about why we can sit here. Please get straight to the point about what you want."

Wen Zhen silently stared at Yan Lin, her gaze containing an incomprehensible scrutiny.

Her fingers tapped the glass one by one, thinking about whether she should tell Yan Lin.

Yan Lin didn't urge her, just quietly waited for Wen Zhen's answer.

After a long while, Wen Zhen finally moved. She stopped tapping the cup and then took out a neatly folded piece of paper from her bag. It wasn't hard to see that this paper had been crumpled and then smoothed out before being folded.

Wen Zhen opened the paper and spread it flat, pushing it in front of Yan Lin.

Yan Lin's gaze moved down slightly, but the moment she saw the words on it, her expression changed dramatically.

She recognized this handwriting—the words on it were too familiar to her.

Fu Sixue, sitting to the side, also looked at it. "Bucket list? Who wrote this? Does this mean a suicide note?"

She didn't notice that Yan Lin's expression became even worse after hearing her words.

Neither of them paid attention to her. Wen Zhen looked at Yan Lin seriously: "Miss Yan, I think you should be more familiar with this handwriting than I am."

"Where did this come from?" Yan Lin's expression was so cold it could freeze over, and her hands under the table were clenched tightly.

"I went to Ah Yue's house today to get books. This paper was tucked inside one of the books."

Hearing this, Fu Sixue's mind, no matter how slow, should understand who wrote this paper.

Her expression also became grim.

Yan Lin stared intently at the contents of the paper, wishing she could immediately fly to Feng Yue's side.

"Miss Yan, I know you care very much about Ah Yue's physical condition, which is why I asked earlier if something was wrong with Ah Yue's health." Wen Zhen tapped the paper. "After seeing this, can you still say with certainty that Ah Yue's health is fine?"

Hearing this, Yan Lin suddenly looked up at Wen Zhen, her tone dangerous: "I can be certain that her health is absolutely fine."

Yan Lin wasn't just saying this out of stubbornness. Wendell⁵ had seen all of Feng Yue's examination reports from recent months.

Although she had left early that day, Wendell had called her afterward to explain Feng Yue's condition.

Feng Yue's illness was indeed improving day by day, and she would recover completely in at most six months.

Since there was nothing wrong with Feng Yue's physical health, the problem must be psychological.

And judging from this bucket list, Feng Yue seemed to have already determined her own death date—the same time she had died in her previous life.

Wen Zhen didn't know that Feng Yue had died once before, so she naturally assumed the date on the list was when Feng Yue planned to commit suicide.

"Miss Yan, since you can confirm Ah Yue's physical condition, then there's only one reason this list would appear."

Fu Sixue and Yan Lin naturally thought of it too.

"She's planning her own death."

Although Yan Lin thought the possibility of Feng Yue committing suicide was low, Wen Zhen's words still made her scalp tingle.

"I'll rush to Vancouver overnight to watch over her." Whether physically or psychologically, she would stay with her.

Yan Lin stood up and folded the paper, putting it in her pocket. "Miss Wen, thank you for specifically telling me about this. Here's my business card. If you need me for anything in the future, you can contact me. Thank you."

Yan Lin placed her business card on the table, nodded slightly to Wen Zhen, then hurriedly left.

Wen Zhen watched Yan Lin's departing figure, feeling both relieved and empty inside.

"Don't worry, she's definitely more anxious about this than you are. She's probably heading straight to the airport right now," Fu Sixue consoled.

Wen Zhen glanced at her: "Thank you for today." Then she stood up and walked out without looking at Fu Sixue again.

After leaving the coffee shop, Yan Lin didn't go straight to the airport as Fu Sixue had suggested, but instead drove back to the old mansion at breakneck speed.

The Yan family generally didn't have visitors, so when Yan Lin returned home, there were only her parents in the living room.

Yan Lin used company business as an excuse to pull her father to the upstairs study.

She briefly expressed to her father her intention to take annual leave from this moment forward, with an indefinite return date, then went to her room to pack her luggage while her father shouted angrily.

Yan Lin wasn't sure how long she would stay in Vancouver, so she didn't pack much—she could buy whatever she needed there.

She then appeared at Beijing International Airport⁶ half an hour later, waited one hour, and successfully boarded a flight to Vancouver.

Yan Lin had never been to Feng Yue's uncle's house in this life, but in her previous life, she had been a frequent visitor to Vancouver.

Back then, Feng Yue's father and mother had just immigrated to Vancouver, and as Feng Yue's partner, she naturally cared greatly for the two elders.

She remembered that the house the two elders bought at that time was not far from Feng Yue's uncle's house—a villa that had been uninhabited for a long time.

She planned to buy that house in advance this time.

But this matter would have to wait until she found a hotel to check into first.

The plane landed at Vancouver International Airport⁷ at around 1 AM.

Yan Lin only had time to find a hotel near Feng Yue's uncle's house to check in.

By the time she had settled in at the hotel, it was already 3 AM.

Yan Lin definitely couldn't sleep now, so she changed clothes and went downstairs, walking out of the hotel.

The dark brown windbreaker fluttered in the cold wind, the road was empty of vehicles, only the streetlights still dutifully working.

Following the guidance of her memories, Yan Lin walked to the small villa where Feng Yue's uncle lived.

Then she leaned against a streetlight, took out a cigarette and lit it, white smoke immediately spreading around her.

Feng Yue hadn't gone far from her—she was sleeping in this house right now.

This fact made Yan Lin's heart relax a bit, and her constantly cold fingers warmed up slightly.

But once again, she hadn't listened to Ah Yue and had followed her here.
