

Chapter 93 - Taking Photos

The Ferris wheel gradually rotated to the bottom. Yan Lin habitually stood up, wanting to carry Feng Yue down, but this time Feng Yue grasped her arm.

Yan Lin's emotions were somewhat low, so when she looked up at Feng Yue, her face showed a hint of helplessness. She was a bit confused, "What's wrong?"

Feng Yue slightly turned her head to avoid her gaze, just saying softly, "Just help me down."

Yan Lin: "....."

She pursed her lips, lowered her head with a somewhat hoarse voice, ".....Alright."

Yan Lin helped Feng Yue into the wheelchair. Jiang Zhao and Jiang Ming had been waiting for them nearby.

The Ferris wheel was their last attraction. The siblings made gestures to leave, but Feng Yue called out to stop them.

"Cousin brother, cousin sister." Feng Yue sat in her wheelchair, looking at them with smiling eyes, "Let's take a photo in front of the Ferris wheel. This Ferris wheel is quite pretty."

The siblings readily agreed, but Jiang Zhao always felt something strange about Feng Yue's expression.

The three stood on either side of Feng Yue, each holding one of her arms to lift her up. Yan Lin stood not far in front with her phone, helping them take photos.

After taking the photos, Jiang Zhao released Feng Yue's arm and walked toward Yan Lin. Jiang Ming was puzzled, "Louis, what are you doing?"

"Taking photos. Miss Yan, won't you take one with Xiao Yue?" Jiang Zhao looked innocently at Feng Yue and then at Yan Lin.

Feng Yue, with Jiang Ming's support, sat back in her wheelchair. Seeing that both Yan Lin and Jiang Zhao were looking at her, she smiled, "No need. Yan Lin and I already took photos up there. Let's go home now."

"Mm." Yan Lin responded glumly, lowered her arms and walked forward, placing her phone in Feng Yue's lap, then pushed Feng Yue's wheelchair back as before.

Jiang Zhao watched the two acting normally and could only awkwardly respond, "Ah, oh, okay."

The four returned to the car, with Yan Lin and Feng Yue still sitting in the back row. Perhaps because they had played too enthusiastically today, Feng Yue and Jiang Ming fell asleep leaning against their chair backs shortly after getting in the car.

Jiang Zhao glanced at the two sisters sleeping soundly, quietly turned up the car's air conditioning temperature, then whispered to Yan Lin, "Miss Yan, you must be tired today too. Sleep for a while."

"Mm." Yan Lin nodded, but her eyes didn't close. Instead, she slightly turned to look at Feng Yue sleeping beside her.

Yan Lin stared at Feng Yue for a long time, so long that Jiang Zhao thought all three girls in the car had fallen asleep.

Yan Lin moved her left hand, and when she touched the somewhat hard box in her pocket, her fingers paused, then she picked up the phone next to the box.

Yan Lin switched her phone to selfie mode, then aimed it at herself and the peacefully sleeping Feng Yue, and pressed the shutter button.

This was probably their only photo together this Valentine's Day.

The next day was the Lantern Festival¹. Yan Lin still arrived at Jiang Zhao's house early as usual.

Today was the last day that Feng Yue's family and Yan Lin would spend in Vancouver, so Feng Yue didn't stay in bed today either, getting up before Yan Lin arrived.

Yan Lin skillfully greeted Feng Yue's family members. Jiang Si saw her and thoughtfully asked, "Ah Lin, have you packed all your luggage? Do you need Auntie to help?"

Yan Lin smiled and shook her head, "Thank you, Auntie, but I've already packed. I didn't bring much to Vancouver anyway."

Jiang Si nodded, "That's good. Then we can set off directly tomorrow."

"Mm."

Yan Lin chatted with Jiang Si for a while, then went to the kitchen to find Feng Yue.

There were only three people in the kitchen: besides Feng Yue, there were Grandma Tan and Aunt Miller. The three were currently busy making tangyuan².

This time Feng Yue wasn't sitting in a wheelchair but on an ordinary chair, with her crutches placed beside her.

After greeting the elders, Yan Lin said, "Let me help." She then silently went to the sink and began washing the dishes piled up there.

After that, Yan Lin didn't say another word, like an invisible person.

Feng Yue also didn't greet her. The two only exchanged glances, then turned away to do their own things.

Grandma Tan saw the awkwardness between the two children, but she just smiled and didn't say much.

Soon, all the tangyuan for the big family was wrapped, and Yan Lin had finished washing all the dishes.

Grandma Tan preferred to cook the tangyuan by herself, so she shooed everyone else out of the kitchen.

"Go, go, go play. Grandma can watch over things here alone."

The weather in Vancouver had been particularly good these past few days, and today's sunshine was also very bright, making Feng Yue's heart itch.

Just as she was thinking about asking Jiang Ming to help her move a chair to the yard, Yan Lin had already arranged a small table and chair in the yard.

Yan Lin walked to her side and asked matter-of-factly, "Want to get some sun? I'll help you."

Feng Yue looked at her for a few seconds, then extended her arm toward her, "Thank you for the trouble."

Yan Lin didn't speak, just silently helped her to sit in the yard.

The warm sunlight poured all over Feng Yue. She closed her eyes, tilted her head back, and took a deep breath. She felt warmth spreading through her limbs, making her so comfortable that her mouth corners turned up.

Feng Yue basked in the sun like this for a while, then felt a shadow fall over her eyes. She opened them in confusion and saw Yan Lin extending one hand to hover over the space in front of her eyes, blocking the sunlight falling on her eyelids.

Yan Lin seemed to sense her question. She looked down at Feng Yue and said, "It's not good for your eyes to be exposed to sunlight like this for too long."

Hearing this, Feng Yue sat up slightly and stopped tilting her head back, "Thank you."

Seeing that she was no longer doing that, Yan Lin withdrew her arm.

A peaceful atmosphere flowed between them until Feng Yue broke the silence, "Starting tomorrow, I'll be troubling you."

"Mm."

"If you want to leave midway, you can leave anytime. Anyway, they're already on the road, so there's no chance for them to back out." Feng Yue said.

Although she didn't specify who "they" were, Yan Lin knew Feng Yue was referring to her parents.

"I won't leave." Yan Lin stood beside Feng Yue, slightly looking down at the person sitting next to her, her tone firm, "Wherever you are, I'll be there. I won't leave again."

Perhaps because Yan Lin's tone was too resolute, Feng Yue couldn't help but lift her chin to look at her. Then, as if burned by the emotion in those eyes, she quickly averted her gaze.

Feng Yue rubbed her fingers and said indifferently, "Actually, you don't need to do this. You still have a better life ahead, and you still have... someone you should truly protect. There's no need to waste time on me."

Yan Lin gritted her teeth and couldn't help but argue in a suppressed voice, "If you're not here, my life has no meaning! I don't know any Chu An'an³, and she's not someone I need to protect. The person I need to protect has been destined to be only you since I was fourteen!"

"Don't push me away... I really only have you..." Yan Lin couldn't help but reach out and grasp Feng Yue's chair back, her tone helpless and pitiful.

In the end, their conversation ended unpleasantly.

After lunch, Yan Lin returned to her car and took out a camera, with a paper bag in her other hand.

Jiang Si saw her coming in with a camera and was somewhat curious, "Ah Lin, why did you suddenly bring out a camera?" As for the bag, she instinctively thought it was for carrying the camera.

Yan Lin smiled slightly and said, "I thought since we're going out together, I'd buy a camera to take more photos for you, Ah Yue, and Uncle."

Hearing this, Jiang Si couldn't hide her smile, "Oh my, you child, you're so thoughtful."

"I haven't had contact with photography before, so I want to try it out today first." Saying this, Yan Lin opened the camera in her hands, "Auntie, let me take a group photo of all of you. I can also practice at the same time."

"Of course!" After saying this, she turned to call everyone.

Feng Yue sat on the sofa looking at Yan Lin, somewhat surprised in her heart. She herself had wanted to take a family photo with her uncle's family but couldn't find an excuse. Yet Yan Lin coming with a camera solved this matter.

Feng Yue knew this wasn't a coincidence, but she was indeed surprised by Yan Lin's thoughtfulness.

Yan Lin looked at the dazed Feng Yue, walked forward and handed her the paper bag, then reached out to take her arm and help her walk outside, saying as they walked, "This is a Lantern Festival gift for you. Come on, let me help you take the group photo."

With these words, Feng Yue could be even more certain that Yan Lin's actions were definitely not unintentional - Yan Lin was helping her fulfill her wishes.

It wasn't until Feng Yue was helped to sit in the yard waiting for everyone that she came to her senses and looked at the bag Yan Lin had given her.

The bag didn't contain anything special, just a small black gift box.

Feng Yue opened the box. Inside was a bracelet and a folded triangular talisman paper.

"The bracelet is a golden silk nanmu⁴ bracelet my mom got from a friend. She had it blessed at Jintai Temple, and the peace talisman was also requested by her for you." Yan Lin explained the origin of the items inside, but didn't mention that these were things she had asked her mother to obtain.

Yan Lin used to be a complete atheist, but now that she and Feng Yue had both been reborn, and they were even characters in a book, believing in Buddhism wasn't unacceptable anymore.

As long as she could keep Feng Yue by her side, she would believe in anything.

Feng Yue looked at this bracelet. The dark brown beads gave off a lustrous glow under the sunlight, and taking a deep breath, she could detect a faint trace of incense from the temple.

Since the items were given by Yan Lin's mother, Feng Yue found it harder to refuse. She was somewhat conflicted.

Seeing this, Yan Lin quickly said, "Please accept it. It's my mother's kind intention. Regardless of everything else, she used to like you very much and cared about you."

Feng Yue: "....."

"Please thank Auntie for me."

Yan Lin's expression softened. She reached out to take the bracelet from the box and placed it in her palm, then used her other hand to take Feng Yue's left hand, "Let me help you put it on."

By the time Feng Yue wanted to refuse, it was too late.

Looking at the bracelet now securely resting on her wrist, she could only quietly utter, ".....Thank you."
