

Chapter 106 - Flower Field

After Feng Yue was discharged from the hospital, each day became more boring than the last, but fortunately Yan Lin came to accompany her every day.

Yan Lin still hadn't returned to work at the company. Her father had been urging her for a long time, but she basically treated her own home like a hotel now - every day she would run to Feng Yue's house after waking up, staying until nightfall before going home, then repeating this the next day.

Actually, at the bottom of it all, Yan Lin was still uneasy. She was afraid that Feng Yue might leave again for some strange reason. She always felt she needed to keep a close watch on Feng Yue.

However, Yan Lin also knew she couldn't guard someone twenty-four hours a day, so with her mother's reminder, she thought of a solution.

This morning, Yan Lin knocked on Feng Yue's door early as usual. Aunt Zhao opened the door as usual and handed Yan Lin a cup of coffee and a cup of honey water.

"Good morning, Miss Yan. Have something to drink." Aunt Zhao smiled warmly. "The little miss hasn't gotten up yet. This honey water is prepared for her - go upstairs and wake her up."

"Good morning, Aunt Zhao. Thank you." Yan Lin nodded and went upstairs carrying the two cups.

Carrying the drinks made it inconvenient to knock, so Yan Lin could only gently tap the door twice with the back of her hand. She waited a moment, then heard a sticky voice from inside, "Come in, the door's unlocked."

Yan Lin pressed down the door handle and pushed open the door. The bedroom had the air conditioning on full blast, and the person on the bed was wrapped up tightly, curled into a ball.

The room had its curtains tightly closed and no lights on. Yan Lin had already reached out to turn on the lights but stopped, afraid of hurting Feng Yue's eyes.

She walked to the bedside, placed the two cups on the nightstand, sat down on the edge of the bed, and called softly, "Ah Yue, time to get up." She also reached for the air conditioning remote and turned off the AC.

Hearing the air conditioner's "beep," Feng Yue finally poked her head out from the cocoon-like blankets. Her hair was a tangled mess covering her face. After spitting a couple of times, she said, "Morning. Why so early today?"

Yan Lin reached out to tidy her tangled hair. "I want to take you out today, so I came a bit early. Will you get up now?"

Yan Lin's voice was very gentle, like coaxing a child. Feng Yue, a woman in her twenties, being coaxed with such a tone, actually blushed around her ears.

She loosened her death grip on the blanket and sat up on the bed. Seeing her move, Yan Lin also smiled, stood up and said, "I'll turn on the lights, you go wash up." She even reached out to ruffle Feng Yue's hair.

Feng Yue's leg injuries had long since healed. She had been in a wheelchair before because she had been unconscious too long without getting out of bed. Now after recuperating at home for so long, she could move around simply and freely.

Yan Lin turned on the lights, and only then did Feng Yue throw off the blanket, get out of bed, put on her shoes, and go wash up. When she came out after washing up, Yan Lin had already opened the curtains, and bright sunlight was streaming in from outside, illuminating the entire bedroom.

And Yan Lin was standing in the sunlight, one hand flipping through a book while the other held coffee, taking small sips. Feng Yue looked at her hair that seemed to be glowing and her almost transparent skin, and her heart trembled slightly.

No matter what, Yan Lin's entire being was exactly Feng Yue's type.

Yan Lin noticed her presence, put down what was in her hands, stood up and walked toward her, also carrying that steaming cup of honey water.

"First drink some honey water that Aunt Zhao prepared, then we'll go downstairs for breakfast." She handed the cup to Feng Yue while also straightening her loose pajama collar.

Feng Yue was so dazzled by this beauty that she was dizzy, not caring what Yan Lin was handing her - she just downed it in one gulp. Only when the sweet taste hit her tongue did she belatedly realize.

Ah, so it was honey water.

After Feng Yue finished the honey water, Yan Lin took the two empty cups downstairs, while Feng Yue changed clothes in her room.

Yan Lin didn't wait downstairs long. Feng Yue casually changed into comfortable casual clothes and came downstairs.

The two had a light breakfast in the dining room, then got in Yan Lin's car to go out.

Yan Lin was afraid something might happen to Feng Yue's health again, so this time she took her directly to Jintai Temple to visit Master Huiji.

Yan Lin had made an appointment with Huiji in advance, so this time they were again directly led in by a young novice. However, this time they didn't go to the meditation room in the back courtyard, but to the main hall.

"Master Huiji is interpreting divination slips for pilgrims. Please wait a moment, benefactors." After saying this, the young novice put his palms together, bowed to them, and left.

Feng Yue looked at the statues of various deities enshrined in the main hall, turned to Yan Lin and said, "Let's also pay our respects."

Yan Lin nodded, took Feng Yue's hand, and helped her kneel on the prayer cushion. The two put their palms together, devoutly closed their eyes, and silently expressed their gratitude to the deities.

Only after the two kowtowed and opened their eyes did they discover that Huiji was already waiting beside them with a smile.

"Miss Yan, it's good to see you again."

"Master Huiji." Yan Lin nodded to him, then introduced Feng Yue. "This is my beloved, Feng Yue."

Yan Lin spoke with a straight face and steady heartbeat, while Feng Yue felt somewhat flustered hearing this. However, she didn't contradict her here, since the important matter at hand wasn't this.

This was Huiji's first time meeting Feng Yue. Seeing this child's blessed facial features, his smile deepened. He also knew why these two children had come today, so he said directly, "Miss Feng has deep Buddhist affinity. All matters will turn from extreme misfortune to great fortune, and your future days will be smooth and prosperous."

Hearing this, both felt relieved. After all, no one wanted to experience that kind of thing again.

The two chatted with Master Huiji for a while, then Feng Yue became interested in the divination slips and went to draw one.

When she returned with her slip, Huiji was no longer there, leaving only Yan Lin waiting for her in place.

Feng Yue thought Huiji was busy with affairs and didn't think much of it. She took the slip and went with Yan Lin to queue at the interpretation area.

During this time, Yan Lin went to use the restroom. When she returned, Feng Yue was already having her slip interpreted.

She stood in place, watching Feng Yue listen attentively, and couldn't help but smile.

"How was the result? Was it good?" Yan Lin asked when she saw her approaching.

Feng Yue smiled and said, "Results aren't everything. Besides, what if it were a bad result?"

Yan Lin took her hand, and the two walked toward the hall exit. "If it's good, then it's destined by fate. If it's bad, then it's 'my fate is in my own hands, not heaven's'.¹ I have my own ways of comforting people. So was it good or bad?"

Feng Yue raised her eyebrows. "It was the highest grade of good fortune."

"What specifically did it say?"

Feng Yue turned to look at her and smiled. "I'm not telling you."

Yan Lin was stunned for two seconds then laughed. However, hearing Feng Yue say this, she didn't continue asking. When the other person wanted to tell her, she would naturally know.

The two returned to the car. Feng Yue thought they would just go home like this, but after watching Yan Lin's route for a while, it wasn't the way home.

"Do we have other places to go?" Feng Yue was somewhat curious. "Is it far?"

Yan Lin nodded. "It's about two hours by car, so if you're tired, sleep for a while. There's a small blanket in the back - take it to cover yourself."

Feng Yue shook her head, instead turning on the car's sound system and rolling down the windows.

Soothing music flowed from the car's speakers, filling the entire cabin, along with the warm breeze blowing past, lifting the hair at Feng Yue's forehead.

Yan Lin glimpsed her leaning back in her seat with a content expression and couldn't help but show a gentle smile.

Neither spoke, just driving forward on the empty road with the warm sun and leisurely breeze.

More than two hours later, Yan Lin finally brought Feng Yue to their destination.

Before them was a large white building. Yan Lin took Feng Yue's hand and walked inside. The building was very quiet, as if there was no one else besides them.

Feng Yue looked around, guessing in her mind what this place could be.

Yan Lin didn't keep Feng Yue waiting too long. The two stopped in front of a door at the end of the corridor.

The door was the kind with double white carved panels, but the intricate flowers carved on it looked so familiar to Feng Yue.

"What exactly is this place?" Feng Yue really couldn't help but ask curiously.

Yan Lin didn't answer her question, but took her wrist, leaned close to Feng Yue's ear and asked, "Ah Yue, are you ready? I'm going to open the door."

Feng Yue had just been curious before, but now Yan Lin's words made her somewhat nervous.

So she said nothing, just gazed at Yan Lin, exhaled, and nodded.

Yan Lin smiled, then forcefully pushed open those carved doors. As the carved doors opened, Yan Lin's voice sounded in Feng Yue's ear.

"Ah Yue, welcome to Six-Inch Moon's rose garden."

Sunlight, breeze, and even the rich fragrance of roses instantly assaulted Feng Yue's five senses at this moment.

Then, a European-style pavilion appeared at the end of the corridor, and around the pavilion and corridor were blooming roses.

Among these clusters of blooming and well-maintained rose gardens, the winding path paved with bluestone slabs was particularly eye-catching.

Feng Yue stood there stunned, staring at this miraculous sea of flowers with a dazed expression.

Then, she involuntarily began walking forward. One step, then another, getting closer and closer to those roses.

Until the breeze blew past, bringing the salty smell of earth, did she suddenly come back to her senses.

She was now in a world of roses, those delicate and beautiful flowers showing off their charm to her without reservation.

Feng Yue walked step by step deeper into the flower garden, while Yan Lin followed closely behind her.

Seeing the smile on Feng Yue's face, Yan Lin felt that all her maneuvering and exhaustion during this time was worth nothing.

The two stood on the path paved with bluestone slabs, Feng Yue excitedly looking at the flowers before her.

If she wasn't mistaken, all the varieties here - at least all the varieties she could see - were new cultivated strains that had never appeared on the market. To build such a flower field, the human resources, material resources, and financial resources spent would be an enormous and astonishing sum.

Moreover, handling all those matters wasn't easy.

Feng Yue had no doubt about the love and effort Yan Lin had poured into this. This wasn't something money alone could accomplish - the thought Yan Lin had put in was beyond her imagination.

Feng Yue had thousands of words she wanted to say to Yan Lin, but didn't know where to begin.

At this moment, Yan Lin seemed to see her inner conflict, so she stepped forward, took her hand, and said, "Ah Yue, I have something to tell you."

Yan Lin's gaze looked straight at Feng Yue, the determination and seriousness in her eyes both familiar and strange to Feng Yue.

Feng Yue felt somewhat nervous under her gaze. An idea was about to break through barriers and appear before her.

Just then, melodious bell sounds came from the winding path ahead of them.

Feng Yue curiously turned to look, and saw a completely black cat approaching from ahead, wearing a white bow tie around its neck with a small bell underneath - that was what was making the sound.

"It..." Feng Yue suddenly remembered the black cat Anna they had met in Bali.

"It's the one." Before Feng Yue could finish her question, Yan Lin gave the answer.

"I... I thought it would be a while before it arrived home..." Feng Yue's face broke into a smile, though her eyes were somewhat red.

After waking up, she hadn't not thought about the kitten. It's just that she had been recovering and recuperating before, and she thought it wasn't time yet, so she never mentioned it. She hadn't expected that this kitten entrusted to them by the mother cat had already traveled across oceans and come home.

Feng Yue wanted to hug the kitten, but Yan Lin reached out to stop her. "Wait a bit longer."

The kitten trotted toward them. When it got closer, Feng Yue saw that the cat was carrying something like a small box on its back.

Feng Yue's heart began beating violently.

As time passed, the kitten ran to their feet. Besides the scents of its cat mother and that shop owner, the first person the kitten had seen was Feng Yue. Although only a very faint scent remained at that time, it still instinctively went to Feng Yue.

Feng Yue picked up the kitten and held it in her arms. The cat also lay quietly on Feng Yue's arm.

Only then did Yan Lin reach out to remove the box from the cat's back, then under the cat's and Feng Yue's gaze, she knelt on one knee and opened that dark gray small box.

"Ah Yue, will you marry me?" Yan Lin looked up at Feng Yue, who was surrounded by roses.

Just like many years ago, in the Yan family's greenhouse, Feng Yue had made her first confession to that girl standing among the roses.

At that time, sunlight couldn't fall into Yan Lin's lowered eyelashes, and Feng Yue couldn't enter Yan Lin's heart.

But this moment was both the same and different from that time.

Feng Yue stood there with her back to the light, no trace of sunlight visible in her eyes, but her heart was full of Yan Lin's image.

Her pale wrist lifted slightly, and sunlight fell on it, making this hand appear even more white as jade.

At this moment, Feng Yue could hear no other sounds, only her heart beating like drums filling her eardrums.

Then, she heard her own voice.

"I do."

As Feng Yue's words fell, the cool touch of jade settled on her ring finger, followed by an overwhelming, passionate kiss.

The kitten in Feng Yue's arms seemed unable to bear the two people's embrace and lightly jumped down, disappearing into the flower bushes in a few bounds.

"Mm, the cat..." Feng Yue's worried words leaked out from between their joined lips and teeth.

Yan Lin slightly loosened her hold and said, "Don't worry, Frost will take care of it." Then she kissed Feng Yue's fragrant, soft lips again.

The feeling of having her breath taken away made Feng Yue grip Yan Lin's clothes tightly, like a drowning person grasping the last lifeline.

After who knows how long - long enough for Yan Lin to notice that Feng Yue was nearly suffocating - only then did she release her, then hold her tightly in her arms.

Feng Yue lay limply against Yan Lin's neck, breathing slightly heavily, surrounded by the familiar scent of orange blossoms.

Feng Yue leaned in Yan Lin's embrace and smiled. Jintai Temple was indeed worthy of its reputation.

When winds are calm, ships can sail; like the autumn moon, perfectly round. Marriage need not bring much worry; spring flowers will celebrate at the door.

Marriage divination, fourth slip, highest grade of good fortune.

---End of Main Text---

Footnotes:

¹ "My fate is in my own hands, not heaven's" (我命由我不由天) - A famous phrase expressing the belief that one can control their own destiny rather than being subject to the whims of fate.