

Chapter 39 - Saving Someone

Yan Corporation Building, Conference Room.

Yan Lin sat properly in a video conference with executives from overseas subsidiaries. Besides her, the conference room contained three secretaries from the president's office and Mo Yixu.

Yan Lin had just returned home last night to receive a thorough lecture from her parents. Although her parents had angrily educated her, they ultimately couldn't dissuade her from her intention to move to Songhe Bay.

When her mother couldn't convince her, she could only ask her only friend to act as a mediator.

And this mediator was currently waiting in her office, just waiting for Yan Lin to finish her meeting.

Two hours later, this lengthy video conference finally ended, and Fu Sixue, who had been waiting in the office, had just finished a nice nap.

Yan Lin pushed open the office door and saw her lying on the sofa under a small blanket, playing with her phone.

"Hey, finished with work?" Fu Sixue saw her come in and quickly sat up, putting away her phone.

"Mm."

Fu Sixue swayed her feet and asked: "Auntie urgently contacted me last night, asking me to stop you. What are your thoughts?"

Yan Lin glanced at her: "You can't stop me."

After a pause, she added: "I have boundaries. I won't affect her recovery. I just want to be closer to her. I'm almost... can't breathe."

"You asked me before what you should do, and I said to stay away from the moon. You haven't forgotten, have you?" Fu Sixue looked at her.

Yan Lin shook her head: "No. I will avoid her. I just want to stay somewhere where I can see her."

The office window was wide open, and the sunlight outside streamed directly down onto Yan Lin. But Fu Sixue couldn't feel any warmth of being bathed in sunlight from her.

What was there was only the sinister shadow of the side that faced away from the light.

"I won't allow anyone to take away my moon. Not anyone." Yan Lin sat there, her back to the sunlight, but her eyes were unusually bright, like beast pupils glowing in the darkness.

As Yan Lin spoke, the scene from that day at the French restaurant appeared before her eyes—Feng Yue walking away from her side by side with that woman, leaving her behind.

Fu Sixue stared at her for a while, then narrowed her eyes slightly: "Wen Zhen, right? I quite like her." After saying this, she lay back down on the sofa, ignoring the look Yan Lin gave her.

After Fu Sixue spoke, there was no sound from Yan Lin in the office for a long time. Curious, she lifted her head to look and found Yan Lin's somewhat strange gaze.

"Why are you looking at me like that?" Fu Sixue unconsciously touched her face. She wasn't wearing makeup today, so there shouldn't be anything strange on her face.

"You like Wen Zhen?" Yan Lin's expression was somewhat complex.

She had originally planned to use any means necessary to keep Wen Zhen away from Feng Yue, but now Fu Sixue liked her, which not only left her at a loss but even made her wonder whether she should act.

"More or less, but it's just that we get along well. If you're asking whether I really like her that much, then no." Fu Sixue waved her hand casually.

Yan Lin nodded, lowered her gaze, and said no more. She would reconsider the matter of Wen Zhen.

The two didn't say much more. Fu Sixue knew this trip was wasted—she couldn't stop Yan Lin.

A few days later, Yan Lin successfully moved into Songhe Bay, and indeed, as she had promised, she never encountered Feng Yue.

So, without Feng Yue's knowledge, Yan Lin moved downstairs from her, and the two completely became neighbors separated by just a ceiling.

Golden Week was approaching, and Feng Yue moved her follow-up examination up by a week, just so she could smoothly go to the resort villa with Wen Zhen and the others during the holiday.

The doctor treating her was still Professor Fang, but Wei Yuran, who had previously accompanied her throughout, had never appeared again after her divorce from Yan Lin to avoid suspicion.

Her condition was recovering much better than she had expected. During this hospital visit, Professor Fang also prescribed fewer medications than before.

After the follow-up examination, Feng Yue's last task before Golden Week was to meet the blind date her little aunt had arranged for her.

After that day, Feng Yue's little aunt had also contacted her separately, telling her some basic information about the lawyer.

Xia Yangting, 28 years old, one of the partners at Beijing Shizhong Law Firm, graduated from a well-known domestic political science and law university, with parents who were both professors at Beijing University—truly from a scholarly family.

At that time, looking at the other person's impressive resume, Feng Yue felt a sense of admiration and respect from the bottom of her heart.

In contrast, she herself was suffering from illness. Although she was a top student from the finance department, she was an unemployed wanderer who had just started filming food videos. If you took away her family background, she was probably nothing.

This stark contrast only increased the guilt in her heart.

This guilt continued until the day she met this Lawyer Xia.

This matter was destined to end in failure, so apart from her family, she didn't tell anyone.

Their meeting was scheduled for 2 PM today, at a coffee shop on the first floor of Hengyang Building in downtown Beijing.

Afraid of traffic jams, Feng Yue didn't drive but chose to take the subway instead.

When Feng Yue emerged from the subway station, she was hit by a gust of cold wind. Although the weather wasn't very cold yet, the wind still made her shiver.

There were many people on the street, mostly adults holding children's hands out for fun. She stood by the roadside waiting for the pedestrian crossing red light. Across the street was the first floor of Hengyang Building, and the coffee shop was right across from her.

The red light still had more than twenty seconds left, and quite a few pedestrians had gathered at the intersection waiting.

Just then, a reckless child came running over, stumbled, and immediately crashed into a girl diagonally in front of Feng Yue. The girl was right next to the flowing traffic.

The incident happened suddenly. Many people hadn't had time to react when the child fell against her, and the girl's body swayed, looking like she was about to fall out into traffic.

Almost instantly, Feng Yue quickly reached out to support the girl's arms and pulled her back, barely avoiding the oncoming traffic. Feng Yue herself also became unsteady and looked like she was about to fall backward.

Fortunately, there were many pedestrians behind Feng Yue. With their support, she stumbled a few steps but didn't fall to the ground.

"Oh my, baby, are you okay! Why were you running around! Did you hurt yourself?" A middle-aged woman pushed through the crowd and quickly picked up the crying child from the ground.

The girl who had been saved by Feng Yue also came to her senses. She had obviously just realized what had happened and what her fate would have been if Feng Yue hadn't saved her.

"Sister, are you okay?" Feng Yue patted the girl's shoulder.

"Thank... thank you." The girl's legs were a bit weak. She turned to thank Feng Yue, then angrily looked at the boy who had bumped into her.

"You're fine, that's good." Feng Yue was about to say something else when the little boy's parent interrupted her.

"Don't you watch where you're going! Look what you've done to my child! He's hurt so badly!" The middle-aged woman pointed at her child's scraped knee and chin, which were bleeding quite a bit.

"He was the one who bumped into me! I almost got hit by a car!" The girl was obviously unwilling to swallow this injustice.

"Almost—but you weren't actually hit! My child is really injured! What's wrong with you girls these days? I would have let it go if you just apologized, but here you are being unreasonable!"

Feng Yue frowned, clearly unable to stand it anymore: "Madam, if I hadn't pulled this girl back in time, you would be calling 120 for an ambulance right now. And so many people saw it—your child was running around everywhere and bumped into someone. Don't bully a young girl."

"Exactly! Your child clearly bumped into her, and you're still making false accusations. Do you have any decency!"

"Watching your child run around on the street, we can tell the parent has no manners either."

"Turning right and wrong upside down—you really have some nerve. Don't you have any shame!"

Most of the people who could be waiting at this traffic light at this time were young people going shopping at Hengyang Building across the street. They weren't about to tolerate these unreasonable troublemakers.

The middle-aged woman's face turned red and white from what the surrounding pedestrians said, but she wasn't planning to let it go. She shouted loudly: "What business is it of yours! She was the one who bumped into my son. Are you going to pay for his injuries?!"

Just as everyone was about to scold her more, a female voice came from behind Feng Yue: "If this young lady decides to sue your son, you'll probably be detained because of your son. If you still want money from her, that would constitute extortion and you'd go to prison."

After all, everyone was ordinary citizens, and when it came to crossing legal boundaries, the woman wasn't as righteous anymore.

"Just because you say sue doesn't mean you can sue. It wasn't our fault anyway."

"There are surveillance cameras here." The female voice pointed to the camera above them.

The middle-aged woman couldn't say a word with her neck stretched out.

Combined with the contemptuous looks from the surrounding pedestrians and her son's painful crying, she could only sheepishly pick up her son and try to push through the crowd to leave.

"How can you just run away without even apologizing!"

"So shameless, if you can't say it, let your son apologize!"

"Exactly, quickly apologize to the young lady!"

The waiting crowd unconsciously blocked the middle-aged woman's path. Having no choice, she could only slap her son's bottom with an ashen face and shout: "Stop crying! This is what you get for running around! Quickly apologize to that sister!"

The child, both in pain and frightened, cried as he said sorry to the girl who had been bumped. Seeing this, the crowd finally made way for the mother and son.

The girl felt protected by everyone and felt grateful. She thanked everyone, then turned to look at Feng Yue and the lady behind her.

"Thank you both, thank you so much." The girl was young, and after her anger subsided, she felt afraid. Her eyes reddened and tears flowed out.

The woman who had spoken up waved her hand: "It's nothing. I was actually bluffing her just now. If she had been determined to argue with you, we couldn't have helped much except call the police for you."

Feng Yue nodded and took out a pack of tissues from her bag to give to her, comforting her: "Don't be afraid, don't be afraid. The most important thing is that you're okay. You really scared me just now."

"Sister, thank you so much. Let me treat you both to a meal!" The girl wiped her tears and said.

The two declined the girl's invitation, chatted with her briefly, and then left.

Feng Yue had been stepped on twice when pulling the girl, and her white shoes now had two grayish footprints.

She looked at her phone—there was still some time before the appointment, so she decided to go to the bathroom in the building first to clean her shoes before going to the meeting.

After Feng Yue finished cleaning her shoes, she walked toward the coffee shop.

The coffee shop reservation was made under the other person's name, so after Feng Yue gave the server the name, she was led inside.

Feng Yue stopped in front of the table and looked at the lady sitting across from her, raising an eyebrow in surprise: "Lawyer Xia?"

The other person looked at her, obviously also somewhat surprised: "You are... Feng Yue?"

Sitting in the seat across from her was none other than the woman who had just spoken up to help the girl at the intersection.
