

Chapter 48 - Ordinary Person

Ever since Wen Zhen confessed to Feng Yue at the fireworks show, Feng Yue had locked herself in her room as soon as they returned to the guesthouse.

Zhou Qiongqiong knew nothing about what had happened between the two of them. Seeing Feng Yue quickly flee to her bedroom, she thought she was tired and didn't disturb her.

Meanwhile, Wen Zhen, who knew everything, silently watched Feng Yue return to her room.

Looking at Feng Yue's back, which could almost be described as fleeing in panic, she felt somewhat guilty.

Her actions tonight would definitely put Feng Yue in an awkward and troubled position, and might even cause Feng Yue to distance herself from her. But she didn't regret it. If she had to do it again, she would still choose to say those words to Feng Yue at that moment.

Feng Yue sat dazedly on the edge of the bed, her mind still buzzing. She didn't understand how things had developed this way, and she couldn't understand why Wen Zhen would confess to her.

She propped her head up with one hand, frowning tightly, completely unsure how to face Wen Zhen in the future.

Wen Zhen had said she already knew her answer, so since she already knew, why did she still say it? Couldn't they just be good friends?

Feng Yue leaned back and fell onto the bed, sinking into the soft bedding. The white fluorescent light on the ceiling was somewhat glaring. Feng Yue turned her head away and blinked her slightly stinging eyes.

She just wanted to make a few friends. Why did they have to become lovers? The relationship she had spent twelve years of energy cultivating couldn't even get a good ending, let alone her knowing Wen Zhen for only a few months.

She didn't believe she and Wen Zhen could have any good outcome.

She wasn't some moon—she was just an ordinary person who had once foolishly tried to chase the moon.

Feng Yue pulled up a corner of the blanket and wrapped herself up in it. The narrow, warm, and quiet space made her feel secure.

Feng Yue deeply understood the pain of pursuing a hopeless relationship, so she didn't plan to string Wen Zhen along. She would find an opportunity to make things clear. As for Xia Yangting, whom Wen Zhen had mentioned, she would also clarify that she and Xia Yangting were just ordinary friends who had met through a blind date.

Having made up her mind, Feng Yue stopped dwelling on it. After washing up and getting ready, she fell into sweet dreams.

The first thing Yan Lin did after returning to the country wasn't to go back to the company to handle business, but to visit Feng Yue's home with apologetic gifts to make amends.

She now knew about Feng Yue's trip, so she dared to visit so openly.

Father Feng was at the company, so Mother Feng received her alone.

Mother Feng was preparing to go out and play mahjong with nearby wealthy ladies when she was surprised to see Yan Lin.

"Ah Lin?" Mother Feng looked at her carrying several things with some surprise.

Yan Lin, carrying her things, said: "Auntie."

Mother Feng invited her in and asked: "What's all this...?"

"I came to apologize." Yan Lin bowed apologetically to Mother Feng. "What happened before was my fault, and because of me, Ah Yue was hospitalized again."

"Ah, you..." Mother Feng was somewhat at a loss. "If you want to apologize, Nuan Nuan isn't home, and besides, your parents already came before."

"I know." Yan Lin lowered her eyes. "I should take responsibility for my actions. I know Ah Yue doesn't want to see me, so I deliberately came when she wasn't here."

Mother Feng didn't speak, seeming troubled by the things Yan Lin had brought.

Yan Lin knew Mother Feng was reluctant to accept her gifts, so she continued: "I met with Dr. Wendell in Germany a few days ago. He's a very authoritative expert in the brain field. I showed him Ah Yue's medical records, and he said that based on the records, Ah Yue's condition isn't serious. As long as she cooperates with treatment, she can recover completely."

As soon as Feng Yue's condition was mentioned, Mother Feng perked up. She also knew about this Dr. Wendell. When she and her husband had taken Feng Yue for checkups at a friend's hospital, they had been recommended this authoritative expert.

They had later considered whether to find connections to contact Dr. Wendell, but they didn't have the right channels, and since Feng Yue's condition was relatively stable, the matter was shelved.

Now hearing Yan Lin mention this doctor, Mother Feng became serious.

Yan Lin continued, pointing to the things she had brought and placed aside: "These health supplements have all been reviewed by him and have no side effects. They're beneficial for Ah Yue. Please be sure to accept them."

Mother Feng looked at the pile of health supplements with foreign text that looked like hieroglyphics, and knew these were probably things Yan Lin had specifically brought back from abroad for Feng Yue.

If Yan Lin had brought ordinary things today, she definitely wouldn't have looked at them and would have told Yan Lin to take them away. But what Yan Lin brought were things beneficial to her Nuan Nuan.

Mother Feng pondered for a moment, then gestured for Aunt Zhao to take the items, then turned to Yan Lin: "Ah Lin, Auntie won't beat around the bush with you."

"Auntie has accepted the items, but whether to forgive you is Nuan Nuan's matter. Your uncle and I won't interfere with any decision she makes. I don't know what happened between you two, and Nuan Nuan has never told us, so we have no right to forgive you on her behalf. If you want to win her back, you can only move her with sincerity. There's no other way."

Yan Lin nodded. She indeed had never thought of approaching this from Feng Yue's parents' side. The conflict between her and Feng Yue couldn't be resolved so simply.

"Thank you, Auntie." Yan Lin stood up. She had only come today to successfully deliver the items to Feng Yue. Since Mother Feng had accepted them, she should leave.

"Auntie, there are still things at the company, so I'll go first."

"Mm, I won't see you out. Drive carefully."

"Goodbye, Auntie."

Mother Feng stood at the door watching Yan Lin's car drive away, then returned home to instruct Aunt Zhao: "Don't tell anyone about Yan Lin's visit today. As for those health supplements she brought, have Nuan Nuan start taking them, and just say I found someone to buy them."

Aunt Zhao nodded in agreement.

Yan Lin sat in the car, looking grimly at the tablet in her hands. It displayed Xia Yangting's personal information and the full story of how Feng Yue had met her.

Yan Lin now understood that Xia Yangting and Feng Yue had met through a blind date.

And this blind date was arranged jointly by Feng Yue's aunt and Xia Yangting's mother.

Yan Lin looked at Xia Yangting's information, her clenched fingernails digging deep into her palms.

Shizong Law Firm...

Yan Lin pondered for a moment, then picked up her phone to contact a secretary from the CEO's office.

"Tell the legal department that when the contract with Qize expires this year, they don't need to renew it. Have them directly contact Shizong Law Firm."

The other party was obviously hesitant: "Boss Yan, do you mean the legal department should directly decide on Shizong as the partner?"

"Yes, decide on them directly."

"Understood."

After hanging up, Yan Lin lowered her eyelashes. One Wen Zhen was already enough of a headache for her—she didn't want to see another one around Feng Yue.

Their company's main business next quarter would all expand overseas, and the legal department and legal advisors would travel abroad for business trips. She wanted to send that person overseas in advance.

Shizong's structure was very simple. Apart from Xia Yangting as one partner, the other two partners weren't good at handling economic matters, so the person traveling overseas would definitely be this Lawyer Xia.

Yan Lin's calculations were clicking away, while Feng Yue at the resort remained completely unaware.

After experiencing Wen Zhen's confession, Feng Yue had been looking for an opportunity to clarify things with her, but because Zhou Qiongqiong was always around them, this matter kept being postponed. Even when they packed their luggage to return home, Feng Yue hadn't found a chance to be alone with Wen Zhen.

However, precisely because Zhou Qiongqiong was there, their interactions didn't change much. Wen Zhen seemed to understand Feng Yue's awkwardness and troubles, and didn't do anything to make her uncomfortable.

Wen Zhen also drove on the return trip, with Feng Yue in the passenger seat and Zhou Qiongqiong in the back.

Wen Zhen knew Feng Yue had been wanting to talk to her, so she suggested dropping Zhou Qiongqiong off at home first. Zhou Qiongqiong, who understood her senior sister's feelings for Feng Yue, had no resistance to this and considerately agreed.

So after dropping Zhou Qiongqiong off at home, Wen Zhen parked the car on the roadside.

"Ah Yue, do you have something to say to me?" Wen Zhen asked.

Feng Yue gripped the strap of her backpack, somewhat conflicted about how to begin.

Wen Zhen didn't rush her, just quietly waited for her to organize her words.

After a long while, Feng Yue's red lips parted: "Sister Wen Zhen, although you said you knew my answer, I still think I should respond to you seriously. I'm very grateful for your feelings toward me, but I don't have any intention of dating right now. I'm sorry."

As she spoke, Feng Yue lowered her head, not daring to look into Wen Zhen's eyes. She knew how painful it was to be rejected by someone you liked, and she knew her rejection was like rubbing salt in Wen Zhen's wounds.

But these were things Feng Yue felt she had to do. She couldn't just muddle through this matter and give Wen Zhen false hope. She should seriously and earnestly respond to the love Wen Zhen had expressed to her.

"So tell me, how can I not like you?" Wen Zhen sighed and reached out to pat Feng Yue's head, but ultimately stopped her movement.

Her position in Feng Yue's heart was different now—she shouldn't touch her without Feng Yue's consent.

"Ah?" Feng Yue looked up, not understanding.

Wen Zhen smiled, then turned the car key to start the engine, looking steadily at the road ahead: "You're so considerate of others—have you ever thought about yourself?"

"You want my confession to receive a serious, earnest response, and you don't want me to be too sad. I already told you that you didn't need to answer me. Wouldn't choosing to avoid the issue occasionally be good?"

"No." Feng Yue looked up at her seriously. "I know the feeling of being ignored and dismissed. That feeling is very unpleasant. I don't want to become someone I hate. Every feeling deserves a serious response."

"I'm really happy that you can like me. At least it shows that there are things about me worth liking."

"I'm an ordinary person, but I also hope to become a likeable ordinary person."

The setting sun's afterglow poured through the car's windshield into Feng Yue's tea-colored eyes, like golden powder scattered in those eyes, sparkling and impossible to ignore.

Wen Zhen tried hard to look away and focus on driving. But she still couldn't stop her heart from trembling.

How could anyone not like such a Feng Yue?

We are not the moon; we are just ordinary people. But everyone must choose someone who treats you like the moon.

I hope everyone can meet a pursuer like Sister Wen!

Chu Susu is a well-known player¹ in the imperial capital, oriented toward women, beautiful and wealthy, generous with money, with endless romantic prospects.

But recently she miraculously changed her ways, cultivating herself and being devoted to only one person.

That person is called Han Xuan.

She smiles without showing her teeth, is gentle and polite, quiet and introverted—completely the type of obedient little lamb that Chu Susu loves most.

Even the blush that appears on her cheeks when she's shy hits all of Chu Susu's aesthetic preferences.

The relationship between the two continues to heat up, until Chu Susu stays overnight at Han Xuan's house for the first time.

It was a night when countless stars hung in the sky. Chu Susu was waiting for Han Xuan to shower, but accidentally stepped into her studio.

She saw hundreds of brightly colored portraits filling the entire room, and in the paintings—

They were all of Chu Susu.

What caught her attention was the one hanging high on the wall, with a signature date from several years ago.

But they had only just met a few months ago.

"Susu?"

Footsteps came from behind. Han Xuan stood at the door with wet hair.

She still had that shy smile, but her eyes gleamed with an ambiguous light, brighter than the stars in the sky.

Intense, dangerous, and intimidating.

"You shouldn't have wandered around."

That night, Chu Susu first understood what it meant to be a wolf in sheep's clothing.

It turned out she smiled without showing her teeth because she was hiding her fangs.
