

Chapter 54 - Recovery

Feng Yue didn't take Yan Lin's words to heart—those words about how whether it was three years or beyond, there would only be her alone. She didn't believe them.

Perhaps during the three years after her death, Yan Lin indeed had no one else by her side as she claimed, but when it came to emotions, there were no absolutes.

In this world, there might truly be someone who couldn't warm a heart made of stone even after twelve years of trying, but there might also be someone who could make that stone bloom with just one year's effort.

These things were unpredictable. Although Feng Yue felt somewhat pitiful about herself, she was no longer obsessed with such matters.

For the current Feng Yue, family was the most important thing. In her previous life, her parents had suffered too much. In this life, she should compensate them more.

Now there were only about six months left until the time of her death in her previous life. Perhaps she couldn't change her fate, or perhaps she could be lucky enough to survive this hurdle. Feng Yue couldn't be sure, so she could only choose to live well in the present.

Even if she still couldn't escape the fate of death after six months, at least she wouldn't leave behind as many regrets as in her previous life.

However, the most troublesome thing at the moment was this Yan Lin who had just arrived here—this Yan Lin who possessed memories from her previous life. Obviously, she temporarily couldn't accept the fact that they had already divorced.

"Ah Yue... why did we... divorce? How... how could I have agreed to it?" No matter how hard Yan Lin racked her brains, she couldn't understand how she could have divorced Feng Yue.

Feng Yue was peeling an apple for her on the side, just like taking care of an ordinary patient. However, for Feng Yue, Yan Lin was indeed just an ordinary patient, and this patient was hospitalized because she had saved her.

"The divorce was proposed by me. As for why you agreed, I'm not clear about that."

"Then why did you..."

Before Yan Lin could finish her words, Feng Yue interrupted her.

"Because we weren't suitable. Yan Lin, I liked you for twelve years, and then I understood this truth in this lifetime. No matter how much I once liked you, unsuitable is unsuitable." Feng Yue put the cut apple pieces into a fruit plate and handed it to Yan Lin. The size of the apple pieces was exactly the size Yan Lin was accustomed to.

Yan Lin looked at this plate of apples and opened her mouth as if wanting to say something. Feng Yue followed her gaze to look at the plate of apples and immediately understood.

"When I was young, I didn't like reading English novels. Although the stories attracted me, I found them troublesome, so I read translated versions. Later, when more and better books appeared before me but they didn't have translated versions, I had to start reading the English originals, and then gradually got used to it. Later, even when there were translated versions available, I still thought the English versions were better, so I rarely read the translated ones."

Feng Yue picked up a piece of apple with a fork, her gaze also falling on this evenly sized piece of apple. "Some things aren't just habits—I suddenly felt that this way was better. Just like this piece of apple, cutting it to this size is most suitable."

Yan Lin clenched her teeth tightly, the strands of hair hanging by her cheeks covering the surging emotions in her eyes.

She understood what Feng Yue was saying. She wanted to tell her that some things she did weren't because she still had lingering feelings for her, but simply because that was how things should be done—that was the best way to do them.

Everything Feng Yue did had nothing to do with her, Yan Lin.

The warm winter sun shone through the hospital room window, falling on Feng Yue as if plating her with a layer of gold.

The two didn't speak anymore, just quietly eating the apples from the fruit plate. The hospital room was left with only the sounds of their chewing and the operation of the medical equipment connected to Yan Lin.

Yan Lin never mentioned the divorce again, but instead received meticulous care from Feng Yue every day. However, Yan Lin still felt awkward.

She couldn't feel even a trace of affection from Feng Yue toward her. It was more like Feng Yue had found a job as a hospital caregiver, and she was just her employer.

A Feng Yue without human warmth and a Yan Lin begging for Feng Yue to have human warmth—they lived together in the hospital like this for a week.

Actually, it wasn't accurate to say that Feng Yue was taking care of Yan Lin, since Mother Yan was also there helping. Yan Lin's condition didn't really require so many people watching over her, but Feng Yue was repaying a debt of gratitude, while Mother Yan was concerned about her daughter.

This afternoon, the doctor appeared in the hospital room with Yan Lin's freshly released test results. "All the patient's physical examinations show no problems. Blood routine and coagulation factor activity values have also recovered. Let me check the recovery of your wound."

Yan Lin followed the doctor's instructions, sitting on the hospital bed, lifting the hair from the back of her neck and arching her back.

A wound about eight centimeters long meandered across the area from the left back of Yan Lin's neck to her left shoulder, almost injuring her spine and almost injuring an artery.

The doctor gently pressed the tender wound and asked, "Besides pain, do you feel anything else?"

"Sometimes it itches a little, nothing else."

The doctor withdrew his hand and nodded. "That's normal—new flesh is growing. Your body's coagulation function is different from ordinary people, so the wound's scabbing speed will be much slower than normal people. You still need to wear the cervical traction device properly to avoid accidentally tearing the wound a second time."

"Okay, thank you, doctor." Mother Yan also breathed a sigh of relief upon hearing this. "When can she be discharged approximately?"

"Actually, she could be discharged now, but her physical condition is rather special. We're afraid that if the wound bleeds again after discharge, she might not receive timely treatment. However, if there are medical personnel on standby at home, that would also be feasible. Staying in the hospital now is just a precaution."

Mother Yan thought for a while and still decided to discharge and go home. They could have Wei Yuran stay at the old mansion during this period—with him there, Yan Lin wouldn't have any accidents.

So Mother Yan discussed with the doctor for a few sentences and then prepared to handle tomorrow's daytime discharge procedures.

Only Yan Lin and Feng Yue were left in the hospital room again. Feng Yue had nothing to say to Yan Lin, so she prepared to help her lie down and rest as usual.

"I need to go to the bathroom." Yan Lin said.

Feng Yue looked up, then helped her put on the cervical traction device and supported her to stand up and walk toward the bathroom.

Yan Lin closed the door and went into the bathroom alone, while Feng Yue waited for her outside. She sat on the toilet lid, thinking about how to make Feng Yue continue staying by her side.

After discharge, Feng Yue definitely wouldn't go home with her. Even if she proposed it, neither Feng Yue nor her mother would agree.

Could it be that she and Feng Yue could only go this far?

Yan Lin was lost in thought when Feng Yue outside felt that Yan Lin had been inside for quite a while.

She was afraid something might happen to her inside, so she knocked on the door. "Yan Lin, are you okay?"

Yan Lin quickly came back to her senses. "I'm fine, I'll be right out." After saying this, she stood up and went to the sink to wash her hands, pretending to have finished using the toilet.

However, because she was somewhat lost in thought, her left elbow accidentally knocked over the mouthwash cup on the counter. Yan Lin instinctively reached out to catch it, and because of the sudden sideways bending motion, she accidentally pulled on her wound, causing her whole body to freeze in pain.

The ceramic mouthwash cup fell to the ground and shattered into pieces. Yan Lin also frowned tightly due to pulling on her wound, followed by waves of dizziness.

Yan Lin guessed that it should be brain hypoxia caused by her sudden bending and sudden straightening. It would be fine after resting for a while.

The sound of porcelain hitting the ground alarmed Feng Yue outside. Her heart tightened, afraid that something had happened to her in the bathroom, so she began knocking on the door while shouting Yan Lin's name. "Yan Lin, are you okay? What fell to the ground?"

"I'm fine, I just accidentally broke the mouthwash cup." Yan Lin supported her forehead with one hand and rubbed it, then pretended nothing had happened and opened the bathroom door.

As soon as the door opened, Feng Yue looked her up and down. After confirming that nothing was really wrong, she then looked at the broken porcelain pieces on the ground.

"Are you okay? Were you cut?"

Yan Lin shook her head. She knew her constitution was special, so she never actively dealt with these fragments. "I'm fine, and I wasn't injured."

"That's good. Then you go rest, I'll handle these things."

"Thank you for the trouble."

Yan Lin returned to bed and slowly lay down, watching Feng Yue busy in the bathroom with no time to pay attention to her. Only then did she reach out to rub her dizzy head.

Feng Yue carefully collected these fragments, sealed them in a sturdy paper bag, then took a pen and wrote "Careful of cuts" on it before throwing them into the trash can.

When she finished dealing with these things and returned to the hospital room, Yan Lin lying on the bed had already fallen into a deep sleep. She probably wasn't sleeping very peacefully, as her beautiful eyebrows were still furrowed.

Yan Lin felt like she had a dream. She dreamed of Feng Yue, dreamed of her mother, and a plate of cut apples.

In the dream, Feng Yue seemed to have said something shocking to her, and then she herself said something that made Feng Yue cry.

Chaotic memories floated around in Yan Lin's dream, causing her a headache. She wanted to alleviate this feeling—she didn't like chaotic and disorderly things appearing in her mind. She needed to figure out what these things actually were.

When Yan Lin woke up again, it was almost dinner time. She opened her eyes to see a scene of orange-red light—the afterglow of the setting sun filled the entire hospital room, appearing warm and passionate.

Feng Yue was sitting on the sofa dozing lightly, the orange-red sunset entirely scattered on her face, her tightly closed eyelashes casting shadows on her cheeks.

Yan Lin looked at her, infinite tender feelings rising in her eyes.

The aftereffects of the mild concussion were cured the moment she opened her eyes. Yan Lin remembered everything.

No wonder Feng Yue had suddenly chosen to divorce her, no wonder she had gone to the hospital for a physical examination first, no wonder Dai Shuangshuang had been left at the villa that night.

All these things that previously made no sense now had reasons.

Feng Yue was the same as her—they had both received a chance to start over. It's just that Feng Yue had arrived earlier, and she had arrived later.

Heaven had given them a chance to start over. She would absolutely not repeat the same mistakes.

Atheist Yan Lin felt for the first time that she and Feng Yue were destined to be together.

Footnotes:

None needed for this chapter as there are no uniquely Chinese cultural elements that require explanation.