

Chapter 64 - Open for Business

Wen Zhen was like she had disappeared - not replying to messages and not answering phone calls. Although Feng Yue was worried about her, she really had no other way to contact Wen Zhen, so she could only wait for her news.

As time passed, the flea market's opening time drew near. Even when they started checking tickets at the venue, Wen Zhen still hadn't replied to Feng Yue's messages.

Feng Yue guessed that the other party might have been held up by something and probably really couldn't make it today.

Looking at the ticket in her bag, she couldn't help but feel a bit disappointed. However, she quickly pushed this low mood aside, since her booth's business was unusually good.

Feng Yue's small stall only had a simple sign with just the words "Six-Inch Moon's Little Shop" on it¹, looking very inconspicuous among all the flashy booths.

But somehow, as the number of visitors entering increased, the line in front of her booth also began to grow.

Qian He and Zhou Qiongqiong were both too busy to chat.

This wasn't particularly surprising to Feng Yue though, since having a booth staffed entirely by top-tier beauties was unique in the entire flea market.

Although the beauty bloggers in the makeup section were also very pretty, they all had some filter enhancement. When they stepped into real life, they lacked that captivating atmospheric quality.

Some visitors were curious about this booth surrounded by people, so they walked closer to take a look, only then understanding why it was so crowded.

"Holy crap, such beautiful ladies! Are they idols?"

"Wow, really! This level of beauty would definitely be the face of any talent show!"

"It doesn't feel like they're idols, probably just regular people."

"Ah! I remember this blogger! She had a vlog before where all her friends who appeared were super beautiful!"

"Indeed, beautiful people's friends are also beautiful!"

Because of their outstanding looks, more and more people lined up in front of Feng Yue's small stall. At first, everyone came to buy things because of the beautiful women, but after some visitors tasted the food, they couldn't help but want to buy more.

Feng Yue never expected her booth's business would be this popular. Although she had made quite a lot of things, it couldn't withstand everyone buying so enthusiastically. So half an hour after opening, Feng Yue finally imposed purchase limits on the queuing visitors.

But precisely because Feng Yue's side was both popular and had purchase limits, even the neighboring booths saw their business improve.

However, what Feng Yue didn't expect was that when people learned they couldn't buy too much food, they began making some strange requests.

"Um, hello, I bought a small cake and fruit tea. Could I take a photo with you?" said a girl holding a DSLR camera, with a trace of embarrassed shyness on her face.

Feng Yue herself wasn't a celebrity, so she hadn't expected anyone to ask for photos with her. After being stunned for two seconds, she nodded in agreement.

"Uh, sure. But are you certain it's me you want?"

The girl nodded frantically, as if afraid Feng Yue would change her mind.

"But I'm quite busy right now and can't leave the booth. Would it be okay to take the photo like this?"

The girl looked at the background of the booth, which was neat and orderly without any clutter, so she nodded again. "That's fine!"

After speaking, the girl handed her DSLR to her friend beside her, then slightly bent her knees and stood in front of Feng Yue. Feng Yue also leaned forward slightly to get close to the girl, with a table between them.

The girl's friend quickly took the photo, and the two left contentedly.

But the girl's action seemed to trigger some strange switch in the visitors queuing behind. No matter who it was, after buying something, they all requested to take photos with Feng Yue, Qian He, or Zhou Qiongqiong.

Although the three were puzzled, taking photos together wasn't a big deal, so they all agreed.

Thus, with the added photo-taking segment, everyone's shopping pace slowed down. Later visitors who didn't know the situation thought this was some idol's booth where people not only bought things but also took photos.

By around noon, the items at Feng Yue's booth had sold out, but there were still many people queuing.

"Qiongqiong, go notify the visitors queuing behind that they don't need to queue anymore since we're out of everything."

Zhou Qiongqiong nodded and went out.

Feng Yue actually felt a bit regretful. If she had known everyone would like her things so much, she would have made more. Seeing everyone's disappointed expressions now made her feel uncomfortable.

After a while, Zhou Qiongqiong returned from the back of the queue with a strange expression.

Feng Yue was also puzzled. "What's wrong?"

"I told them, and although some left, there are still some people who stayed."

"Huh? Why stay? There's no point in queuing when everything's sold out."

"That's what I said too, but they said they wanted to queue to take a photo with you."

Feng Yue: ?

Feng Yue really didn't understand this request. Although people had asked to take photos with her earlier, that was just incidental after buying something. How could there be people specifically queuing just to take photos with her?

So when she sold the last small cake, Feng Yue looked toward her booth front and saw about fifty people still queuing.

"Um, sorry everyone, all the items we brought today have been completely sold out. You don't need to queue anymore."

As soon as Feng Yue said this, everyone let out disappointed sighs, then gradually dispersed in small groups.

More than ten people remained, who all rushed to Feng Yue's booth front together.

These ten-plus people seemed to know each other. A girl wearing glasses looked at Feng Yue and said, "Um, could we take a photo with you? We're all from your fan group. We arranged to come together today, but because of traffic jams, we all arrived late and didn't get to buy anything. So could we take a photo with you? It won't take too long!"

"Fans?" Feng Yue was completely surprised. Since she hadn't signed with any company, she handled everything from filming to material selection to editing by herself, so naturally she had no time to manage any fans.

So this was the first time she clearly realized that she really was being liked by a group of girls.

The girl with glasses thought Feng Yue disagreed, so she said with a bitter face, "Sorry, sorry, you must be quite busy later. We won't disturb you!"

"Ah, no, no." Feng Yue quickly waved her hands. After checking the time, she said to the girl with glasses, "Give me two minutes."

After speaking, Feng Yue went inside the booth, pulled Qian He aside to say something, then came out of the booth to find a more spacious place to take photos with everyone.

The girl with glasses became excited when she agreed to the photo. "It's fine! We can take it right in front of the booth!"

The others nodded too, feeling that any spacious place wouldn't be as meaningful as Feng Yue's little stall.

Seeing they had no objections, Feng Yue naturally had no complaints either, so she asked Zhou Qiongqiong to help take a group photo with these little girls.

Later, several girls boldly requested individual photos, which Feng Yue also agreed to one by one.

After finishing the photos, it was almost twelve-thirty, and the group of girls finally chatted happily among themselves.

The girl with glasses turned around and handed Feng Yue a small gift they had prepared beforehand from her friend.

"This is a gift we prepared for you. We hope you'll like it."

Feng Yue was completely stunned - she was both surprised and apprehensive. "Thank you, thank you! You really didn't need to bring me any gifts! You're all students, right? Please don't spend money like this in the future!"

However, the girl with glasses explained that it wasn't anything expensive, mostly letters and such. Only then did Feng Yue feel relieved.

Photos taken, gifts given, the group of girls was ready to leave. But Feng Yue stopped them.

"It's mealtime now. You haven't eaten, have you?"

Everyone didn't understand what Feng Yue meant, so they all obediently shook their heads.

Seeing this, Feng Yue breathed a sigh of relief and smiled. "Then wait a moment for me. I'll treat you all to lunch. I've already made reservations. You're free, right?"

"Yes!"

"Of course we're free!"

So after Feng Yue and the other two cleaned up the booth, their group plus Xu Yan headed outside the venue.

After entering with tickets, everyone's wrists would be stamped with an anti-counterfeiting mark, so they didn't worry about not being able to get back in after lunch.

The restaurant was one Feng Yue had asked Qian He to book earlier. She had originally wanted everyone to eat hot pot together, but because it was mealtime and the venue had huge crowds today, all the nearby hot pot restaurants were completely booked.

Qian He booked a slightly more upscale restaurant, probably the kind where per person consumption reached several hundred yuan.

Their group of about fifteen people couldn't fit in a private room, so they sat in the main dining hall.

After Feng Yue led everyone to their seats, she began chatting with them. Everyone was quite outgoing and unrestrained, talking with Feng Yue like friends without any awkwardness.

Qian He was also a little fan of Feng Yue herself, so she had even more to talk about with these girls. Zhou Qiongqiong found the scene amusing and took many photos of everyone with her phone, while Xu Yan remained quietly beside Qian He playing games.

This meal was enjoyed by all, so when it came time to part with Feng Yue, everyone felt reluctant.

The flea market ended at 2 PM, and since Feng Yue had sold out early, she didn't need to return after lunch.

After the flea market ended, bloggers had four hours of rest time. Cat Station Video's red carpet and awards banquet would start at 6 PM, broadcast live throughout.

As a new blogger who had gained online popularity, Feng Yue was naturally among those being honored by Cat Station Video.

Since she was receiving an award, that meant she would walk the red carpet, so Feng Yue needed to attend in formal wear.

For a wealthy young lady like Feng Yue, formal wear was the one thing she never lacked.

After the flea market ended, Zhou Qiongqiong left, but Qian He and Xu Yan stayed.

Like Feng Yue, Xu Yan also needed to go on stage to receive an award. As their mutual friend, Qian He acted as their little assistant this time.

Both needed formal wear, so naturally they went to a famous styling studio in Yanjing.

They brought their own gowns, so they only needed simple styling.

Perhaps because the studio was near the convention center, when they arrived, the place was quite crowded.

Feng Yue and the other two were regular customers of this studio, so upon entering, they were led to the inner VIP room.

However, Feng Yue didn't expect to see a familiar face here - someone who absolutely shouldn't be appearing here.
