

Chapter 92 - Amusement Park

The amusement park was smaller compared to some large theme parks, but although small, it had all the essential features¹ - every ride and facility that an amusement park should have was present.

However, there weren't many staff members working at the amusement park today. It was unclear whether this was because the park hadn't officially opened for business yet, or because today was Valentine's Day.

After getting out of the car, the four of them walked toward the ticket gate, where a uniformed staff member was standing, apparently waiting for them.

Sure enough, when the four approached, the uniformed staff member came forward with a smile and inquired, "Are you four Mr. Joyce's friends?"

"Yes, my surname is Yan," Yan Lin stepped forward to identify herself.

"Miss Yan, welcome to you and your friends for experiencing our amusement park. Today, all facilities in the park will be open to the four of you, and the restaurant has also prepared dinner for the four of you in advance. You can go dine at any time. Have a wonderful time!"

"Alright, thank you."

After the staff member led the four of them through the gate, he left. In the vast amusement park, apart from the four of them, no other people could be seen.

The amusement park's sound system was still playing cheerful music, and colorful balloons and decorations were tied along both sides of the paths.

A sudden gust of wind blew by, and Jiang Ming rubbed her arms and shivered, "I'm not saying this to be difficult, but isn't this atmosphere a bit too eerie?"

Jiang Zhao looked up at the sky and felt slightly relieved. Fortunately, the sunlight was good today, so they definitely wouldn't encounter anything unclean.

This place was something Yan Lin had worked hard to book, so Jiang Zhao didn't react like Jiang Ming. Instead, he cleared his throat and took the initiative to say, "Although it's a bit deserted, at least we don't have to queue for the rides."

Feng Yue, sitting in her wheelchair, nodded in agreement.

Her leg injury had actually healed about seventy to eighty percent. At home, she usually relied on hopping on one foot or using crutches. But since they were going out today, using crutches would be inconvenient, so she chose to sit in the wheelchair directly.

Hearing both of them say this, Jiang Ming also let out a heavy breath, pretended to roll up her sleeves, and declared boldly, "Good! Since no one is competing with me today, I won't be polite! Today's goal: ride every attraction at least three times!"

After saying this, she dashed out like a wild horse that had broken free from its reins, with Jiang Zhao following closely behind.

Seeing this, Yan Lin also hurriedly pushed Feng Yue's wheelchair to catch up. Feng Yue, who had originally been preparing to propel her wheelchair forward herself, quietly withdrew her hands.

Although it was a children's amusement park, the rides inside were actually open to adults as well. Common amusement facilities like roller coasters, pendulum rides, drop towers, and pirate ships were all available.

Feng Yue's leg injury didn't affect her ability to enjoy these rides; she just needed someone to help support her each time she got on. This task naturally fell to Yan Lin.

Throughout most of the day, Feng Yue either spent time on the rides or in Yan Lin's arms.

At first, she was indeed a bit unaccustomed to it, but after riding many attractions, she no longer minded this kind of physical contact between them.

The four of them were like unleashed rabbits, continuously riding various attractions that required no queuing. Jiang Ming, who had initially felt somewhat uncomfortable, turned out to be the happiest among them.

After the four had just finished a ride on the roller coaster, Feng Yue felt dizzy and uncomfortable, and Jiang Zhao and Yan Lin also wanted to rest for a while. But Jiang Ming was full of energy and persistently pestered Jiang Zhao to ride with her one more time.

Having no choice, Jiang Zhao had to go with her again. Yan Lin and Feng Yue, finally getting some free time, walked toward the snack stand.

When they first entered, the staff had told them that all facilities in the park would be open to them today, which naturally included these food cart-style snack stands.

Because they only needed to serve four customers, there weren't many ready-to-eat items available at the snack stand. Yan Lin got Feng Yue a glass of sweet and sour lemonade and a small cheesecake, and poured herself a cup of coffee.

"Thank you." Feng Yue took the lemonade and quickly drank a sip to suppress the somewhat nauseous discomfort in her stomach.

The sour lemonade going down her throat indeed made her feel much more clear-headed.

"Drinking something sour should help you feel better." Saying this, Yan Lin took out a pack of tissues from her bag and handed them to Feng Yue.

Feng Yue's face was flushed red, and her eyes clearly showed signs of joy. Seeing her like this, Yan Lin could roughly guess that she was quite satisfied with this outing.

Yan Lin's current wish was very simple - she only hoped that Feng Yue could be happy. As long as Feng Yue was pleased, she could do anything.

So when Yan Lin watched Feng Yue eating like a little hamster with cream all around the corners of her mouth, her entire aura softened, as if she had been soaked in sugar water.

She extended her finger, slowly touching Feng Yue's mouth corner. Feng Yue only felt a warm, gentle sensation at the corner of her mouth.

Then she saw Yan Lin put that cream-covered finger into her own mouth.

Feng Yue: "....."

Almost instantly, a red cloud bloomed across Feng Yue's cheeks, and even her ears weren't spared.

Her mind seemed to crash like a computer, unable to move. Only those eyes were now staring blankly at Yan Lin, blinking frantically.

But Yan Lin seemed to feel nothing improper about it at all. Her entire expression was extremely serious. After eating that bit of cream from her finger, she even nodded approvingly.

"The cake is good, very sweet." Saying this, Yan Lin raised her gaze meaningfully toward Feng Yue.

Yan Lin's voice instantly brought Feng Yue, who had almost lost her composure, back to her senses. She regained control of her body, quickly averted her gaze, then lowered her head and silently focused on eating the small cake in front of her.

Yan Lin watched as Feng Yue turned red all over like a cooked crab, and couldn't help but curve her lips into a smile. Strangely, she now really wanted to hold her tightly in her arms.

Fortunately, Jiang Ming and Jiang Zhao's timely appearance broke the strange atmosphere between the two.

Jiang Ming and Jiang Zhao were also a bit hungry, so they casually grabbed some food from the snack stand and ate a few bites. After resting up, they immediately headed to the next location.

During this time, Yan Lin pushed Feng Yue's wheelchair from behind while Feng Yue sat in front, lost in thought.

She didn't know if it was her imagination, but ever since she and Yan Lin had cleared the air about everything, Yan Lin had inexplicably become much closer to her.

Although it still wasn't as intimate as before their divorce, it was much closer than during the period right after their divorce.

Feng Yue's own feelings were somewhat complicated.

This kind of almost boundary-crossing intimacy - if it had happened before, she would have definitely scolded the other party coldly and mercilessly. But ever since they were trapped on the snowy mountain, she had harbored a glimmer of hope toward Yan Lin in her heart, and she wasn't as resistant to the other party's approach.

Feng Yue slightly raised her eyes to look at the clear blue sky, contemplating her inner feelings, wanting to find an answer.

Unfortunately, rather than an answer, what arrived first was the amusement park's pendulum ride.

Soon Feng Yue forgot about her conflicted thoughts and happily joined Jiang Ming's carnival group, wholeheartedly experiencing these thrilling amusement facilities in the park.

The group played happily until dusk was approaching. The amusement park lit up with colorful flashing neon lights, making it look even more atmospheric than during the day.

The four had been playing wildly all day. Although they had eaten some food to replenish their energy in between, it still wasn't as effective as a proper dinner.

The amusement park's Mushroom Restaurant was located on a small island in the central lake within the park. The entire restaurant was made of glass. Now that night had fallen and the restaurant's lights were on, it looked like a crystal palace.

There were very few people in the restaurant. Apart from the waiters, there was only a three-person band performing on the round stage inside the restaurant.

Jiang Ming, being in a band herself, was naturally more sensitive to music than ordinary people. As soon as she walked into the restaurant, she could tell what those people were playing.

She raised an eyebrow and looked at Yan Lin with a playful expression, "Miss Yan, there are four of us today. Listening to 'Because You Loved Me' isn't quite appropriate, is it?"

Yan Lin touched her nose tip somewhat awkwardly. This was probably something her business partner Mr. Joyce had prepared for her on his own initiative. After all, no one would have thought that on this special day, they would be traveling as a group of four.

Yan Lin called over a waiter and asked her to help tell the performers on stage to change the music.

Only then did the four of them take their seats at the table the restaurant had prepared.

The dinner the restaurant prepared was indeed sumptuous. The four had played very happily today and even opened a bottle of wine. Even Feng Yue, despite Yan Lin's attempts to stop her, drank a little bit. In the end, the only person who didn't touch alcohol was naturally Jiang Zhao, who was driving.

Feng Yue knew her current physical condition well - drinking just a little bit would be fine.

But Yan Lin's emotions were somewhat tense.

She paid great attention to Feng Yue's physical condition. She hoped Feng Yue could break the fatal outcome, so she didn't want anything to go wrong with Feng Yue's condition.

Feng Yue knew she meant well, so she had no way to give Yan Lin a cold shoulder.

However, Yan Lin's low mood didn't last long. She always found that when looking at Feng Yue's smiling face, she couldn't stay angry about anything.

After dinner, the four went to experience the final "must-ride attraction of any amusement park" - the Ferris wheel.

With four people riding the Ferris wheel, everyone tacitly split into two groups: Yan Lin and Feng Yue together, while Jiang Ming had to ride with her brother.

Jiang Ming and Jiang Zhao got on first. Yan Lin lifted Feng Yue horizontally and stepped into the small Ferris wheel cabin.

The two sat facing each other. Feng Yue didn't look at her but turned her head to look at the scenery outside the window.

The Ferris wheel turned slowly, and the entire city's night view gradually unfolded before their eyes.

Feng Yue took out her phone and took several photos. Looking at the scenes recorded in her phone, even her eyes and brows softened considerably.

"Let me take photos for you," Yan Lin said.

Feng Yue thought about it, nodded, and then handed her phone to Yan Lin. She needed to leave more photos for her parents.

After taking the photos, Yan Lin returned the phone to Feng Yue, and the Ferris wheel was about to reach its highest point.

Yan Lin nervously clenched her fingers, her voice somewhat light, "Ah Yue, have you heard the legend of the Ferris wheel?"

Couples who ride the Ferris wheel together, if they kiss at the highest point, they will continue to walk together happily; if they don't, they will eventually separate.

This almost clichéd legend was something even Yan Lin knew, so how could Feng Yue not know it?

But Feng Yue still only looked at the scenery outside the window. After a long time, until their cabin had passed the highest point, Feng Yue finally turned back to look at the person sitting across from her.

"Yan Lin."

Yan Lin's head, which had been hanging down in dejection, suddenly lifted up, her gaze burning as she looked at Feng Yue.

Feng Yue's mouth corner curved into a shallow smile, as if she had found some relief or was trying to convince herself.

"We were meant to separate anyway."

So, this legend had no meaning for them.

Footnotes:

1. 麻雀虽小五脏俱全 - A Chinese idiom literally meaning "though the sparrow is small, it has all the vital organs." It's used to describe something that may be small in scale but complete in function.