

Chapter 95 - Brushing Teeth

Yan Lin focused straight ahead as she applied medicine and massaged away the bruising for Feng Yue, then fled into the bathroom like escaping. However, before entering the bathroom, she remembered to get clothes for Feng Yue first.

After Feng Yue put on her pajamas, she burrowed into the blanket with a red face and let her brain crash.

The long flight had been too exhausting, and after soaking in the bath to relax all her muscles, lying on the bed, Feng Yue gradually closed her eyes and dozed off drowsily.

After Yan Lin showered in the bathroom, when she came out, she saw Feng Yue lying on the bed, sleeping sweetly.

Yan Lin was wrapped in a white bathrobe, water droplets at her temples sliding down her neck into her collar. The belt at her waist was tied loosely, and her footsteps unconsciously became much lighter.

She crouched by the bedside, quietly watching Feng Yue's sleeping face. The rich orange blossom fragrance from both their bodies intertwined, soothing Yan Lin's mood.

The same body wash scent gave Yan Lin an illusion - an illusion that Feng Yue's body carried her scent.

Yan Lin stared blankly at Feng Yue. She had an impulse in her heart; she wanted to embrace her. But she also knew clearly that Feng Yue was exhausted, and she shouldn't disturb her anymore.

But Yan Lin couldn't bear to leave Feng Yue's side. She wanted to keep watching over Feng Yue.

So Yan Lin sat by the bedside for most of the night.

If Feng Yue had woken up midway, she would definitely have been startled by Yan Lin sitting at her bedside.

However, Yan Lin didn't stay up too long either. She was also exhausted, whether from constantly worrying about Feng Yue or the long flight - both had left her physically and mentally drained.

But Yan Lin still didn't leave the room. Instead, she moved a lounge chair from the balcony to beside Feng Yue's bed, then made do sleeping on it.

Feng Yue slept until broad daylight, with no one calling her or disturbing her. So when she opened her eyes and felt the sunlight streaming in through the floor-to-ceiling windows, her mood was incredibly wonderful.

However, just as she turned over to get up, she saw a lounge chair placed beside the bed, with Yan Lin lying on it with slightly furrowed brows, looking like she hadn't slept well.

Looking at her, Feng Yue then remembered that she and Yan Lin were sharing a room, and this room had a king-size bed. She had completely forgotten about arranging where Yan Lin should sleep.

Feng Yue let out an annoyed light snort, and it was precisely this subtle sound that seemed to wake the person sleeping on the lounge chair.

Yan Lin had too many things on her mind, so she didn't sleep soundly. After hearing a slight sound, she woke up.

Yan Lin rubbed her somewhat aching temples, then noticed Feng Yue sitting up on the bed.

Yan Lin instinctively curved her lips into a smile, "Ah Yue, morning." As she spoke, she also sat up from the lounge chair.

But her body, which had spent a night not lying comfortably, protested. She only felt a sore pain from the left side of her neck.

She had a crick in her neck.

"Morning." Feng Yue watched her tiredly covering her neck and asked, "Not feeling well?"

Yan Lin showed a smile indicating it wasn't serious, "A bit of a crick in my neck, it's nothing."

Feng Yue nodded, feeling somewhat conflicted about how to bring up that Yan Lin could sleep on the sofa outside.

Yan Lin probably saw that she had something to say, so while rubbing her neck, she quietly waited for her to speak.

Feng Yue organized her words in her mind for quite a while before finally making up her mind to speak. But when she looked up, her gaze fell on the glaring scar on the left side of Yan Lin's neck.

This was the scar from when Yan Lin had been injured by a falling sign while saving her.

"Make do and sleep with me these few days." Feng Yue's mouth opened and closed, slowly uttering these words.

Yan Lin's hand movements froze, then she looked at Feng Yue in disbelief, unable to say anything for a moment.

Feng Yue felt somewhat uncomfortable under her gaze, slightly turning her head to avoid her eyes, then lifted her blanket and reached for the crutches beside the bed to get up.

But just as one foot touched the ground and she was about to grab the crutches, she suddenly felt her body become light as she was lifted horizontally.

Feng Yue was startled, her hands instinctively grabbing onto the front of Yan Lin's clothing.

And Yan Lin was still wearing last night's bathrobe, with nothing underneath. With Feng Yue's pull, she almost exposed her chest completely.

Yan Lin was overjoyed inside, but only smiled slightly on the surface, looking down at the person in her arms, "There's water in the bathroom. Using crutches isn't safe. I'll carry you over."

Feng Yue: "....."

After a whole night, if there was still water in the bathroom, that would truly be strange.

Yan Lin carried Feng Yue all the way to the bathroom. After entering, she didn't put her on the ground but placed Feng Yue steadily on the washbasin counter to sit.

"Wait a moment, I'll get your toiletry bag."

Soon Yan Lin returned to the bathroom with the toiletry bag. But this wasn't all - she didn't let Feng Yue do anything herself. She not only filled the water but also squeezed out toothpaste, under the pretense that "your hand is injured and can't move around."

Feng Yue: "....."

If it weren't for the fact that having someone else brush your teeth really wasn't practical, Feng Yue felt that Yan Lin would take over this task too.

So a strange scene appeared in the bathroom: Yan Lin wearing a bathrobe with her long hair casually draped behind her, leaning against the wall with a gentle gaze watching Feng Yue while also brushing her own teeth.

And Feng Yue, wearing pink bunny pajamas, was hunched over sitting on the marble washbasin counter, her feet naturally dangling down, her exposed toes restlessly moving about while also brushing her teeth.

However, there was something different between the two: Feng Yue's gaze was fixed on the floor, not daring to look at Yan Lin, while Yan Lin stared straight at Feng Yue. The emotions in those eyes were too deep, heavy and dense, wrapping around Feng Yue until she could barely breathe.

Thus, in the following days, Feng Yue experienced this twice daily - once in the morning and once in the evening. Every time she wanted to refuse, Yan Lin could always find strange reasons to convince her.

Feng Yue had no choice but to silently accept her excessive care, always thinking that this was because she hadn't considered Yan Lin when booking the room, and it would be better when they moved to the next place.

But aside from this small matter, Feng Yue was very comfortable the rest of the time. Yan Lin was very measured in her actions, taking care of Feng Yue properly within acceptable limits during the day, truly not causing Jiang Si and Feng Hehai any worry.

As for nighttime, Yan Lin also maintained boundaries. Although she shared a bed with Feng Yue, she never overstepped. They each had their own small blanket and slept on their respective half of the bed.

So overall, the four-person trip to Sri Lanka went quite well.

As for Yan Lin herself, as long as she could watch Feng Yue smile happily, she felt everything was good.

Ten days later, the family of four boarded a plane again, taking a flight to Tokyo. At the end of February and beginning of March, Tokyo's cherry blossoms were about to bloom.

Tokyo's temperature couldn't compare to Sri Lanka's. As soon as they landed, they felt the biting cold wind. They weren't dressed warmly, so they rushed to the hotel immediately after getting off the plane.

Finally, this time the hotel indeed had many vacant rooms as Feng Yue had expected. Just as she was about to ask the front desk to book another room, Jiang Si stopped her.

"Dear girl, are you and Ah Lin going to stay separately?" Jiang Si was clearly somewhat disapproving.

She still vividly remembered the incident of Feng Yue falling in the bathroom with crutches.

Feng Yue never expected it would be her mother stopping her. She glanced at Yan Lin, who was quietly standing aside letting others arrange things, coughed lightly, and said, "Mom, now that there are vacant rooms, it wouldn't be appropriate for Yan Lin and me to continue sharing..."

Jiang Si nodded. Indeed, since the two children were already divorced, it really wouldn't be proper for them to still sleep together.

Seeing her mother nod, Feng Yue's expression brightened. Yan Lin's mood dropped slightly as she lowered her gaze.

But before Feng Yue could continue booking a room, she heard Jiang Si say, "Hmm... How about this - book a twin room for you two. Each can sleep in a separate bed, then there won't be any problem."

Yan Lin's lips curved upward.

Feng Yue: "....."

She really had never suffered such grievance. Although she didn't always stay in presidential suites when traveling, she had never shared a twin room with anyone.

So Feng Yue watched helplessly as her mother called over her father and very politely asked the front desk to change her deluxe king room to a twin room.

They had plenty of time, so the first day after landing was basically spent resting at the hotel. Yan Lin followed behind Feng Yue, walking unhurriedly toward their room.

Feng Yue pouted, feeling both angry and helpless as she maneuvered her wheelchair forward. Since she couldn't do anything about her mother, she could only take out her frustration on Yan Lin.

How did she take it out?

Well, she punished her by not letting her push the wheelchair.

Yan Lin smiled as she followed behind Feng Yue, not insisting on pushing her wheelchair. She just thought that Ah Yue looked very cute when angry, and it was quite pleasing to watch occasionally.

The two were thus forced to move into the twin room, so Feng Yue once again resumed the twice-daily carrying routine from their Sri Lanka days.

After both had finished washing up and were lying in their respective beds, Feng Yue finally let out a long sigh of relief.

"Ah Yue, shall I turn off the lights?" Yan Lin said.

"Mm."

"Alright, good night then." As Yan Lin's words fell, the room plunged into darkness.

Feng Yue listened to the rustling sounds of the other person getting into bed, which gradually quieted down. She tightened the blanket in her arms and closed her eyes.

Good night.

Feng Yue's breathing gradually became steady as she fell asleep, while Yan Lin on the other bed remained quietly awake, staring at the dark ceiling.

Her breathing was steady and she didn't move at all. Except for her occasionally blinking eyes, she looked as if she had truly fallen asleep.

Yan Lin lay there with her eyes open for a long time. Then, in the dead silence, she sat up, lifted her blanket, and got out of bed.

The dark environment pressed down on her until she could barely breathe. Only by approaching that person and breathing in the faint orange blossom scent on her body could she take a smooth breath.

The twin room would probably become the most difficult place for her to endure during this entire journey.

Cultural Notes:

1. Twin rooms vs. King rooms - The distinction between different hotel room types is important in Chinese culture, where staying in separate beds maintains propriety for divorced couples while still allowing practical care arrangements.
2. Orange blossom scent - This continues to be their signature shared scent throughout the story, symbolizing their deep connection despite trying to maintain distance.