

Chapter 96 - Insomnia

Yan Lin sat quietly cross-legged on the carpet beside Feng Yue's bed, her arms folded on the bed with her chin resting on them.

In Sri Lanka, although she and Feng Yue had separate blankets, at least they slept on the same bed. But in this twin room, they not only slept in separate beds but were also in complete darkness.

Yan Lin's damned little problem had acted up again.

She couldn't absorb Feng Yue's scent, nor could she feel the glow of a bedside night light.

Only by quietly coming to Feng Yue's side like this could she ease the tension and suffocation in her heart.

Feng Yue had already fallen into deep sleep. Yan Lin had seen this sleeping face almost every day during their days in Sri Lanka, but at this moment she still felt it was completely insufficient. Just watching Feng Yue like this only made her more insatiably hungry.

Yan Lin carefully extended her hand, her smooth, clean fingertips gently touching the strands of hair scattered across Feng Yue's forehead. The moment the hair touched her fingertips, it was as if an electric current ran through Yan Lin's body, making her tingle all over.

Yan Lin smiled in the darkness, then withdrew her hand and settled down obediently beside Feng Yue's bed, though her retracted fingers still curled around a strand of Feng Yue's fallen hair.

Only this way could she sleep peacefully.

Early the next morning, Feng Yue woke up naturally. Her biological clock was ingrained in her bones - as long as she wasn't too tired the previous day, she would definitely wake up on time the next day.

So when she woke up, she felt someone lying beside her bed. Feng Yue's heart tightened and she almost cried out in alarm, but fortunately she saw in time who that figure was.

Yan Lin? How could she be sleeping beside her bed?

Feng Yue blinked, thinking she was seeing things. She turned her head to look at the bed next to hers. The blanket was turned back at one corner, the sheets smooth and flat, not looking like they had been slept in.

Feng Yue was slightly stunned, then turned to look at the person lying beside her bed.

Yan Lin... had slept beside her bed all night?

Feng Yue didn't deliberately control her head-turning movement, so Yan Lin seemed to sense some commotion and was about to wake up.

Feng Yue pressed her lips together and quickly closed her eyes, pretending to sleep. She hadn't figured out why Yan Lin was here sleeping, much less knew what they should say if they looked at each other at this moment.

So Feng Yue pretended to still be fast asleep. When Yan Lin drowsily opened her eyes, her first reaction was to look up to see if Feng Yue had awakened.

Phew, fortunately, she hadn't woken up.

Yan Lin breathed a sigh of relief, then carefully moved her body. Anyone who sat on the floor sleeping all night wouldn't feel good - her folded legs had almost gone stiff and couldn't move.

She supported herself on her knees to stand up from the floor, then frowned and moved her sore legs and feet.

Seeing that Feng Yue on the bed still showed no signs of waking up, she felt relieved.

Then Feng Yue quietly lay back down on her own bed. But this time she didn't close her eyes to sleep again. Instead, she sat on the bed with her back against the headboard, put on blue light glasses, and began checking work reports in her email.

Feng Yue listened to the rustling sounds from when they started until they quieted down. After a long time, she carefully squinted toward Yan Lin's side.

Yan Lin was still wearing those pajamas, her long hair draped behind her. The long hair hanging down on her right side was all tucked behind her ear, revealing that nearly perfect profile. She was even wearing a pair of rimless glasses on her nose.

Feng Yue glanced once, then urgently closed her eyes. She had never denied that her love at first sight with Yan Lin was largely due to her exceptionally superior appearance, but facing such beauty first thing in the morning was still somewhat overwhelming for her.

She closed her eyes and turned over, thinking out of sight, out of mind. But her movement naturally caught Yan Lin's attention. She took off her glasses, "Ah Yue, are you awake? It's almost nine o'clock."

Feng Yue made a couple of sleepy sounds, pretending to have just woken up with sleepy eyes as she turned to look at her, "Morning."

Yan Lin looked at her and smiled, got out of bed and walked to her bedside, bending down to ask, "Morning. What would you like for breakfast? I'll have the hotel send it up."

When Yan Lin bent over, all her draped long hair fell down, and a wave of orange blossom fragrance instantly swept over Feng Yue's nostrils. Her expression froze, and she didn't react for quite a while.

Yan Lin thought she hadn't fully woken up yet, so she crouched down to meet her eyes and asked again.

This time Feng Yue finally came to her senses, nodded silently, "Just something simple."

Yan Lin nodded, then stood up and dialed the hotel's internal line, speaking her requests in fluent, unhurried Japanese.

Feng Yue sat up, remembering something and about to remind her, when she heard Yan Lin saying, "Please change the milk to honey water, and keep the other coffee as is."

Feng Yue closed her mouth that was about to speak.

Yan Lin made a few more notes about precautions with the other party before hanging up.

Seeing Feng Yue's hesitant expression, she asked, "What's wrong? Is there something you want to eat? I can order again." She was about to dial the phone again.

Seeing this, Feng Yue immediately shook her head, "No need, this is fine." Yan Lin was already thoughtful enough.

Seeing that she really didn't want anything more rather than being polite, Yan Lin put down the phone. Then she said, "I'll carry you to wash up now. Breakfast should arrive after we finish washing up."

So Feng Yue once again experienced everything she had experienced before.

Twenty minutes later, breakfast was delivered to their room.

Neither of them were accustomed to Japanese breakfast, so what was set before them were Western-style meals.

Yan Lin ate very quietly. She wasn't used to talking at the table with Feng Yue, just lowered her head and ate her breakfast seriously.

Feng Yue looked at Yan Lin's quietly lowered head and the not-so-obvious dark circles under her eyes, feeling somewhat concerned.

She wanted to know why Yan Lin had been sleeping beside her bed.

Feng Yue put down her fork, took a gulp of honey water to clear her throat, and said, "Did you... sleep well last night?"

Yan Lin's movements paused, then she put down what she was holding, took a napkin to wipe her mouth, and said, "Pretty well. Why do you ask?"

Feng Yue averted her gaze, "Ah, nothing, just asking casually. You probably usually stay in presidential suites when traveling, so I thought you might not be used to staying in standard rooms."

Yan Lin looked at Feng Yue intently for quite a while, then smiled, "It's not that exaggerated. Many times when traveling for business, there aren't presidential suites available either. However—"

Feng Yue looked at her curiously.

Yan Lin surveyed the indeed somewhat small twin room, "However, this standard room is indeed a bit small, and it's not very convenient to move around."

"Would you have trouble sleeping because the room is too small?" Feng Yue asked.

Yan Lin was about to shake her head when a thought flashed through her mind. She fixed her gaze on Feng Yue and remained silent.

Feng Yue felt her scalp tingle under her stare, helplessly picked up her honey water and took another sip, "Why... why are you looking at me? If you don't want to say, forget it. I was just asking casually."

Yan Lin saw her flustered appearance, her expression softened as she sighed, "You know."

"Know... know what? I don't know what you're talking about."

"I'm sorry." Yan Lin lowered her gaze, her face full of apology, "I scared you this morning, didn't I?"

Feng Yue was stunned, then slumped against the chair back somewhat dejectedly. She really wasn't suited for extracting information.

"I'm fine..." Feng Yue felt a bit awkward, then asked, "So why did you sleep there... it must have been quite uncomfortable..."

Yan Lin curved her lips and honestly said, "Do you remember I mentioned before that ever since... I've had a little problem? When I'm at home, I sleep with a small light on every night."

Feng Yue frowned, having some vague impression in her mind, but...

"But that's not right. When you were in Sri Lanka, I didn't see you sleeping with a light on, and you didn't sleep by the bed... bedside either."

"In Sri Lanka, I had you by my side, so I didn't need light."

"But I'm still—" Feng Yue stopped abruptly, suddenly realizing that in Sri Lanka they had slept in the same bed, but now...

Thinking about this, she turned to look at the two beds that weren't very far apart. Could this distance not count as being by her side?

Feng Yue stopped talking, and Yan Lin smiled without specifically explaining.

"So you really slept there all night last night?"

"Mm."

"So you really didn't sleep well, right?"

Yan Lin stopped talking again.

Feng Yue somewhat irritably poked at the noodles on her plate with her fork, saying, "When we go out today, let's ask the hotel to prepare a small table lamp for you. Sleeping hunched over there all night isn't a solution."

"No." Yan Lin refused without thinking.

Feng Yue looked at her puzzledly, seeming to wait for an answer.

"You can't sleep with light." Yan Lin said lightly, then smiled again, "You don't need to worry about me. If you don't like me lying there, then I won't do it anymore. There will always be times without lights in the future - it's better to get used to it early."

Feng Yue looked at her forced smile and couldn't help feeling irritated. So she stopped talking and silently continued eating breakfast.

Yan Lin looked at Feng Yue's displeased expression but didn't know what to do. She thought that since Feng Yue didn't like her lying there, she just wouldn't go. But why did the other party look even more upset after she said this?

Thus, their first breakfast in Tokyo ended unpleasantly.

Feng Yue's parents were getting on in years, and with the long flight and jet lag, their morning time was left free.

Neither of them really wanted to go out, so they both stayed in their room, either watching movies or playing on their phones. During this time, the two barely said a word to each other.

Yan Lin wanted to break the silence but didn't know what to say. She tried starting conversations a couple of times, but Feng Yue's responses were bland - neither good nor bad.

Afraid of annoying her, Yan Lin also quieted down.

Feng Yue had been watching this person's expression the whole time. After a while, when Yan Lin went to the bathroom, Feng Yue picked up the phone and dialed the front desk's internal line.

When Yan Lin came out of the bathroom, she saw Feng Yue sitting upright on the bed, then lifting her chin toward her with an indifferent expression.

"Pack up the luggage. We're changing rooms."

Cultural Notes:

1. Sleeping with lights - Yan Lin's need for light while sleeping reflects her psychological trauma and dependence on Feng Yue's presence for comfort.
2. Twin room dynamics - The cultural significance of separate beds in maintaining propriety while allowing for necessary care.
3. Japanese hospitality - The reference to ordering room service in Japanese shows Yan Lin's international business background.
4. Orange blossom scent - Continues as their signature shared fragrance, representing their deep connection despite physical and emotional distance.